SPRING CONVENTION OF BOOTLEGGERS IS SPOILED BY POLICE

up the high lights of Chicago's millionaire profession.

Seated around the convention table—over frothy glasses incidentally—were some of the boys whose names have become synonymous with murder investigations and beer running exploits.

"Sorry, boys, but the chief wants to see you," Captain Stege, deputy chief of detectives, said when he walked into convention headquarters.

"Convention adjourned," Saltis came right back at him.

There was a shuffling of feet and the delegates, to whom an arrest is a mere incidental, prepared for an overnight sojourn at police headquarters.

While police were waiting for the convention to put through its adjournment motion they chanced to survey the convention "headquarters." There were 50 sawed off shotguns on hand and about 50 rounds of ammunition "good for the summer's beginning," according to Stege.

The delegates taken in last night's convention all face old charges which have been piling up against them for several months.
