Pittsburgh Dry Chief Has School To Instruct His Agents How To Work

by William H. Lander
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
Pittsburgh, August 20. —(United Press)—Prohibition agents in this section of the country are now attending classes before becoming full-fledged dry sleuths.

This was one of the innovations initiated by John D. Pennington when he assumed supervision of the Fourth United States District, which includes Central and Western Pennsylvania, with headquarters here.

Pennington, although he retired from the Navy with the rank of lieutenant commander, never attended the naval academy. But he thinks that schooling is a necessary element in the training of field men.

After being in charge of this district for a few weeks, Pennington decided that it sometimes is useless to raid a distillery unless a conviction is later forthcoming.

"Agents will be taught above all," he says, "to get the facts and then present them in court intelligently. Many of the good investigators make the poorest kind of witnesses when presenting their cases in court."

For this reason, W. H. McNaughter, head of the legal department of the prohibition unit, is one of the principal instructors in the school.

The sleuths who are hired for raiding purposes are receiving instruction on the provisions of the law governing such violations and the manner of which such cases should be presented.

The big task of supervising issuance of permits to breweries and drug stores, calls for more intensive training in the legal direction.

Above all, Pennington will see to it that none of his subordinates get the idea that prohibition enforcement work is synonymous with reforming, he announces.

"We want all our agents to be as courteous as possible in the performance of their duties."

"We want them to understand that their job is law enforcement. We are not reformers," Pennington said in discussing the school.

Pennington is the third administrator to hold office in this district since the "Andrews Plan" of enforcement went into effect last September.

His predecessors were Fred C. Baird, right-hand man to Judge Elbert H.

Gary of the United States Steel Corporation, who retired after nine months for "business reasons," and Edgar R. Ray, once a private detective whose resignation after one month of service was accompanied by an attack on the entire enforcement machinery.

Obituary

David Archer, a son of Aron and Susannah Archer, was born near Pleasant Mills, June 9, 1859, and departed this life at his home near the town, August 5, 1926. On June 8, 1881, he was married to Evaline Archbold. To this union, six children were born. Two of the children, Harvey and Velma, died in infancy, while another, Mrs. C. P. Mathewson, died at her home in Midland, Michigan, January 31, 1926. Two sons, Sherman and Carl, reside at Pleasant Mills, and one daughter, Mrs. Gus Smith, resides at Midland, Michigan. The widow and ten grandchildren survive, also. Funeral services and burial were held at Pleasant Mills.
