LITTER WEIGHTS

2,678 POUNDS

without a set-back.
"After they were weaned, which occurred at about eight weeks", continued Mr. Habegger, "I gave them about all the shelled corn they wanted, continuing the slop to which I added ground rye. This system of feeding was followed until they were about four months old, when I gave them corn and tankage, free choice, in a self feeder. The slopping was continued as before."

Mr. Habegger brought out that he would hardly know how to feed hogs without milk in some form, which corresponds pretty closely with the opinions of most ton litter feeders. However, feed is not the only thing necessary for successful hog feeding and Habegger unconsciously impressed those present with the fact that his excellent management and attention given the litters had a lot to do with his success.

The test is something of which anyone might be proud. When most farmers' spring pigs are just getting about big enough to fatten, Joe has his ready for market. The big bulk of last spring's pigs will be boarded for two or three months longer and then placed on a low market. Not only have Habegger's pigs been fed economically, as fast-gaining pigs must be, but they are ready for the market at the time of year history shows hog prices are likely to be the highest of the 12 months. Once again does the Hoosier Ton Litter Club prove it applies the principles of good business to hog raising on the average farm.

were stolen from the building of the Glenmore Grain company.
