Last call for purchasing your season Chautauqua ticket. The big six-day program opens Monday and every afternoon and night a high class and entertaining program will be given.

The fair and Chautauqua next week will attract many visitors and traffic will be more or less congested on certain streets and highways. Be careful when you drive, don't try to make any out-of-the-way turns and observe the traffic rules. Ample police protection will be provided and accidents can be avoided if we all heed the law.

Along with the opening of schools and colleges, Lincoln Andrews, dry enforcement chief, announces that he will open a school next month for the purpose of instructing his assistants in the fine arts of catching the bootlegger and rum-runner. If the boy turns in all the receipts for making home-brew it will require a regular cook book to list all the different ways of making one's favorite drink.

A community where people get along, where they go about with their own business, attend their own church, help improve living conditions and otherwise cooperate with one another is the right kind of a place to live in. This community is one of the finest on earth and any attempt to bring about ill-feelings among the people is resented and we believe will be given the cold shoulder.

Meetings like the one held at the K. of C. hall last evening when a number of representative farmers were guests of the local Rotary club among those who live in the city and those who are their neighbors in the country. The problem of the farmer is as much concern to the man who lives in the city as it is to the man who raises the crops and it is right that we all try to help each other.

The doors to the undertaking parlor where the body of Rudolph Valentino lies could in death have been closed to the public and only those who show cards from the movie star's manager will be admitted to see him. In historical fashion, girls and women and even men jammed the undertaking establishment, broke in the doors and rushed into to see the dead Valentino. It's right that we should pay our respects to the dead, but when a solemn occasion is made into a fist fight and brawl, it's time that it is stopped.

Banks were probably never rendering a greater service to the public than they are today. Within recent years they have been emphasizing the value of properly safeguarding the interest of a wife and mother, in estates which are left to them in the shape of insurance payments or other assets. Her business has been running the home and raising the family. In 99 cases out of 100 she cannot be expected to know the difference between good and bad investments. The result is, that savings left for her protection are too often acquired by the smooth stock salesman who offers a "glittering" proposition which "promises" large returns. A trust, administered by the modern bank, eliminates the danger of lost capital and assures a steady income. It is the height of folly for dependent persons to attempt to speculate with or invest funds upon which their future living depends. There would be less need for charitable institutions, if the trust idea was better understood and more extensively followed.

There is something fascinating about an old flour mill located on some shady stream, with its creaking old water wheel. This type of mill is rapidly disappearing. There is one located in Oregon, which was built in 1860 and is still operating. It is called the Old Monitor Mill because it was named after that famous Civil War warship. The interesting part about this mill is that it was built from hewn timbers fastened together with wooden pins. The original building is still in use, and after 36 years the wood of which it is built seems to be as sound as on the day it was put up. Building substitutes may come and go, but the native woods of America will always lend dignity and permanence to the structures in which they are used.

Invited by the Rotarians, about fifty farmers were the guests of the local club last evening and had the opportunity to learn first hand about the corn borer a talk on this pest being made by Hon. Frank Wallace, state entomologist. The meeting was a fine example of community spirit and both business men and farmers enjoyed it thoroughly. Mr. Wallace stated that in his opinion the corn borer would not do any damage in this county for another year and that every effort was made to prevent its spread. The moths are carried with the winds, the infestation is several of the northern Indiana counties coming from Canada. The unusual northeast winds which we had during July this year are attributed as being responsible for the spread in this state and the state conservation department has a force of experts at work trying to detect the pest and route it as soon as possible. A slight infestation in a field of corn will not injure the crop, the problem being to kill it before it spreads again in the spring. Mr. Wallace stated that he had the cooperation of the farmers and that he did not anticipate any serious results in Indiana at present.

After Harvest Program
