"Looking around suggests personal work. All of the great, fundamental truths of Christianity were committed by Christ to individuals. He deliberately ignored the multitudes that pressed about him to deal with individuals. Hand picked fruit is the best. We can help save our husbands, and wives, and sons, and daughters, through personal effort.

"The looking within requires a searching of self. We need to pray the prayer of the psalmist: 'Search me, and try me, and know my ways.' Then will we ask to have a new heart and a right spirit created within us. The church must take the world out of its heart, and put the world upon its heart. As Christians, we must not be burdened by the world, but be burdened for the world."

BELOVED WRITER IS HONORED BY HER HOME TOWN

pletely covered in tomorrow's Daily Democrat.

The tree-planting ceremony was supervised by Earl Hollingsworth, of Geneva. The tree planting was one of the important features of the program, because at the same time an entire forest was being planted in New York in memory of Mrs. Porter. A ladies' quartet rendered several selections and a competitive song program was held by the school children. D. B. Erwin, of this city, delivered the other important message of the afternoon.

Governor and Mrs. Jackson had planned to leave Geneva early this afternoon, but later decided to remain there until late tonight, and they will also be present for the band concert at that town tonight, to which the public is invited.

It is estimated that more than 3,500 persons attended the memorial services, which were held in the main street of Geneva. The crowd began to gather early this morning and by noon more than a thousand already were assembled for the occasion.

Mr. Erwin's address was as follows:

"Ladies and gentlemen: Every individual is a builder. Everybody leaves behind him a legacy to the world. Each and every person, whether he is conscious of it or not, builds in his lifetime some kind of a structure and leaves it for those who come after him.

"Some are good, some are bad, some are built upon a rock, and endure long after the builder is gone, and the same is occupied by others as a rich and lasting inheritance; some are left built on the sand and the occupants go out with the tide.

"Much we enjoy here today is a legacy left us by those who preceded us and have gone on before.

"The pleasant surroundings we see are the result of the toil and the labor and the sacrifices of our forefathers, and but for their having lived they would not be ours to enjoy.

"These beautiful landscapes, the fruitful fields are the fragrant gardens have grown up out of a primitive forest or a swampy waste; the constructed water ways making the fertile soil, the bulled road bed, the established church, the organized high school, the endowed college, the luxurious steam heated home, the radio, the electric light, the automobile, the frigid air are ours scarcely without our efforts and are made possible largely by those who have been 'hewers of wood and drawers of water,' for they cleared the land and made it produce our substance, and which but for their labor and sacrifice might have yet been a primitive forest or a tangled jungle.

"In this age people live scarcely without effort; few people in America are hungry, few are without raiment, and the great heart of the American people is so responsive to the needs of others, that times of great calamity make all things common.

"It is because of these things that we are honored and respected throughout the world; we are the object of the envy of the jealous and the emulation of the truly great.

"Men die and pass on to live again, and leave behind them, each in his turn, his legacy; some leave houses, some leave lands, some leave herds, some leave bonds, some leave gold, and some leave naught of a commercial value at all. The house may crumble, into decay, the land may dry up or waste away, the herds may die, the bones and gold are consumed or scattered.

"We are told that 90% of all commercial inheritances is scattered in 5 years. The greatest legacies are not houses, or lands, or herds, or bonds or gold.

"But he who cultivates in his heart a love of man for his fellow man, who cultivates in his life a true spirit of unselfish brotherhood and in his daily life and intercourse with others disseminates that spirit, who makes mankind to see the duty that lies nearest him, who makes men to recognize his responsibility to his fellow man and his accountability to his God, who makes men and women and youth to see the beauty and joy all around them, who makes all to see the handwork of the Great Creator in all things beautiful and good; who makes the sunset of time seem as the sunrise of Eternity, and leaves behind him in the hearts of men the everlasting truth that the God of Nature endures forever and everywhere, builds the greatest structure and leaves behind him the greatest legacy of all.

"We meet today to honor the memory of such a one; one who lived and toiled and loved among us. She sought not fame nor the plaudits of man, but she touched the hearts of heret a love of man for mankind, and made him see more plainly his duty to the world and to his God, she touched the proud heart and made it humble, she made the vain to be abased; she made the blind and the dull to open their eyes to the beauty of the world; she gave to good fathers and mothers for their children words of praise and endearment; she gave to the boys the useful idle fields and commons for their sports, the pleasant streams and ponds to swim in, and she gave to all children, all and every flower of the field and blossom of the woods, (but she warned them of the thistle and the thorn as well), she gave to them the banks of the brooks and the golden sands beneath the bottom thereof and the odors of the willows that dip therein, and the white clouds that float high over the giant trees; she bade them be merry in the long, long days in a thousand ways; to see the stars at night, and the dipper and the Milky Way and to wonder at their magnitude; she gave the snow clad hills to coast upon, the frozen streams to skate upon in winter, the meadows and the clover blossoms and the butterflies and the songbirds, and the birds, and the echoes, and the strange noises and to each she gave his place at the fire-side at night with all pictures that may be seen in the burning wood to enjoy without hindrance or without the embarrassment of a single care. She gave to lovers their imaginary world, and the stars and the moon, the red roses by the wall, the bloom of the hawthorne, the sweet strains of music, and all else they may desire to measure to each other the last- ingness and beauty of their love.

"And to those no longer children or youth or lovers, she brought back and kindled anew of those latent impulses that they might live the old days over again freely and fully without care or diminution.

"To those whose heads are snow-crowned she bequeathed a love and memory of the other days, the happy ness of old age, the love and gratitude of their children until they fall asleep.

"She made mankind better lovers of nature, of mankind and of God. For those who do not love mankind, who do not love the trees, the grass, the flowers, the streams, and the birds, cannot love the Great Creator of them all so reverently as those who do love the trees, the grass, the flowers, the streams, and the birds.

"She made us all to know that 'The world is full of roses' And the roses full of dew And the dew is full of heavenly love

"That drips for me and you."

"Today we plant this tree in memory of her whom the world loved, 'May it grow and mature and may it send its branches high and wide into the air she breathed and loved and blessed.

"Let us trust that in after years even when we shall have joined her in the great beyond, that some weary tired and foot-sore traveler may pause and rest beneath its shade, and here recall her life and her labor and her love and see once more the beauty of the world as she saw it and take a new courage for the journey yet unfinished.

"Ladies and gentlemen: I thank you for this opportunity to add my humble tribute to the memory of our most distinguished beloved and honored citizen, Gene Sjatun-Porter. God bless her whose memory we revere."

west, through the new Berne addition and the Peter Lehman farm, cross the cement road at right angles where the road now turns south on the Geneva road. The changes shorten the route a half mile. The engineers are now working a survey between Berne and Geneva. Plans for meeting the expenses of purchasing the right of ways will be taken up in a public meeting to be held in Decatur about the middle of October.

What is that Large Grey Bulk? It is the Net Deficit

That large grey bulk is the amount of material your furnace turns back from every ton of ordinary coal—it is ash, and nothing else. It represents heat loss—and dollars lost.

The large grey bulk besides representing the net loss of heat, also represents the loss of time as much ash as is necessary. Something to think about!

Consolidation CLEAN Coal saves you the expense of paying coal prices for that grey mass because it is coal which is mined CLEAN and kept free of visible non-combustible impurities. It gives you an unvarying supply of live, active heat. It is, in fact, the best household coal we have ever handled. Why not try a load today?
