ADAMS COUNTY DAIRYMEN RECEIVE WIDE RECOGNITION THROUGH REMARKABLE WORK

In a recent issue of The Indiana Farmer's Guide there appeared an illustrated article entitled "Adams County Illustrates Profitable Feeding to Quality Cows." The article was written by James H. White, of the magazine's staff. Part of the article, together with the three photos used in connection with the story, are reprinted herewith through the courtesy of The Indiana Farmer's Guide.

"Dairymen of Adams county, Indiana, received their first state-wide recognition about three months ago when they were cited as an example of the benefits of feeding home-grown crops to high-quality cows only. This was considered quite a distinction, because the Adams County Cow-Testing Association is less than 2 1/2 years old. However young this organization may be, it has advanced rapidly in the principles of testing work and the records of many of its members are enviable achievements.

When the association had completed its second year's work a summary of the last 12-months' records was made by G. A. Williams, of Purdue, which illustrated how much more profitable it is to market the home-grown feeds through the better cows than by way of the poorer ones. The animals were listed according to their butterfat production, and no animals in the herds less than nine months and no 2-year-old heifers were included. In comparing the 10 high and 10 low cows, it was found that the average individual in the high group produced 12,027 pounds of milk containing 478.3 pounds of butter fat in a year's time.

Her feed costs for the period amounted to $116.43, but the income over feed costs totaled $147.50. For the low 10 group, it was revealed that the average cow gave only 5,975 pounds of milk containing 184.2 pounds of fat. Her feed costs were only $80.80, but the income over these expenditures dropped to $21.13.

"Thus the average member of the 10 high cows produced 6,052 pounds, or 101 per cent more milk, and 290.6 pounds, or 157 per cent more fat than her sister of the low-producing class. Likewise, the average yearly feed cost of the better group was $35.63, or 44 per cent greater, but her income over feed cost exceeded that of the low-average cow by $126.37, or 598 per cent.

"In other words, it required seven of the 10 low cows to produce as much income over feed costs as one of the better animals. One cow, regardless of her production, must have just as much stable room as another. The high producer is fed, milked and cared for with very little extra labor, but her returns are many times greater and her calf is worth considerably more. The bulk of the produce in this association is sold to the same market in approximately the same manner, thus one cow does not have a marketing advantage over another. Therefore, the difference in the return for feed consumed is largely a matter of economy in production.

"Mr. Williams in preparing the summary also submitted a table showing that the cost of feed per 100 pounds of milk produced by the average cow of the high group amounted to 97 cents and the cost for the same metropolis.

Then the railroad came the canal shippers refused to give the railroad ground and it swung off through a neighboring town. When it was built and placed in operation, Millan began to go backward.

Now it is planned for Millan to "come back." Millan plans as its second phase the preservation of the old Edison birthplace. The old place will not stand the ravages of many more years and so that it may be saved for posterity it is proposed to build a beautiful museum over the humble dwelling.

In this museum will be placed old and new devices gathered from all parts of the world, which are demonstrative of the life of Edison.

Field Museum To Have Paintings Of Animals

Chicago, — (United Press)—D. C. Davis, director of the Field Museum of Natural History has announced that a set of 28 murals, depicting the strange animals of the distant past, will be painted on the walls of the museum immediately. Charles R. Knight of New York has been retained to paint the murals.

The murals are the gift of Ernest R. Graham and they will take six years to complete.
