TEACHER TENURE ACT IS DEFENDED

permanent contract, but said he believed most of the difficulty was caused by the reactions of school trustees to an unfamiliar law, and that the hysteria would wear off in a short time.

"I advised all teachers," the superintendent said, "that they should sign up next year's contracts before the new law went into effect. A great many of them did so, and as a result have at least one more year in which to adjust themselves to the new conditions. I hope by that time school authorities will appreciate the benefits of the new system and retain their present personnel.

Answering objections to the new tenure act, Miller denied that it would have a tendency to retain "dead timber" in the school system. "There are plenty of ways to get rid of inefficient teachers," he declared, "without arbitrarily pushing them out of office at the end of five years. Those who do not conform to the highest standards can be dismissed at any time, as they have been in the past.

He also repudiated the suggestion that teachers holding a permanent contract would tend to "slow up" in their work.

"Teachers are not made of that kind of material," he said. "Such a thing might happen in a great industrial plant, where none is especially interested in their profession, and considering the small salaries they receive, are entitled to a permanent position with no chance of layoffs and resultant loss in earning.

1927 SPRING IS "ALL WET"

Figures Show More Rain Fell This Spring Than In Any Spring On Record

Indianapolis, June 1 (United Press)—Rain sufficient to obtain the notice of the U. S. weather bureau fell in Indiana during March, April and May on 44 days out of 92.

This is bound to provoke the statement from one person out of two that he or she has personal knowledge, to the contrary, that it actually rained 92 days out of 44, but the weather man doesn't bother with anything less than .01 of an inch.

The figures were given today by J. H. Armington, U. S. meteorologist for Indiana, in a report prepared for the United Press. Searching his records, Armington discovered that the 1927 spring will go down in history as wetter than any preceding season. As far back as his records go, Armington could find no parallel.

Getting Wetter and Wetter
Meteorologically speaking, Indiana is getting wetter and wetter. The next rainiest spring of which Armington could find record was as recently as 1922 when it rained 40 days out of 92.

Here is Armington's report: "The spring season of March, April and May, 1927, throughout Indiana, was marked by more frequent rainfall than any other similar period in the official weather history of the state. Rainfall to the amount of .01 inch or more occurred on 44 days during those three months of the present year. The next wettest season was that of 1922 with 40 rainy days.

"The rains have been so heavy and frequent as to keep the soil soggy over wide areas of the state and the rivers have been over their banks over extended periods.

"In the southern third of the state, where drought prevailed during several previous seasons, there has been a decided excess in rainfall during the three months in question, reaching its climax in May, when a number of localities received from five to eight inches more than the average amount for the month. At Madison, Vincennes and Paoli, particularly, the rainfall of May was in excess of 10 inches.

"The heaviest day's rain at any one place in Indiana was at Madison, on May 8, when 4.09 inches fell in 24 hours."

That's what Uncle Sam says about the rain.

Agricultural experts consulted today were at a loss to estimate the dollars and cents meaning of the rainfall to the farmer. The were certain, however, that it was tremendous.

Each day's rain has meant thousands of dollars out of the Indiana farmer's pocket, especially to growers of corn of whom there are 160,000 in the state, who today are 30 days behind in their spring planting.

Less corn has been ploughed and planted than for many years and the lateness of the work threatens a greatly lessened crop. Wheat was not affected.

Other states fared better. In the north central tier of states, farm work is behind an average of two weeks.

No Dance Saturday Night

Owing to the death of Peter Zeser, there will be no dance at Sun-Set Amusement Park Saturday night of this week. The regular dance will be held Sunday night, however, Dan Zeser, owner, announced today.

CORNS

Lift Off—No Pain!

Doesn't hurt one bit! Drop a little "Freezone" on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then shortly you life it right off with fingers. Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of "Freezone" for a few cents, sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the foot calluses, without soreness or irritation.
