Coolidge Begins Fifth Year As Chief Executive

whether the document will be delivered. Mr. Coolidge hopes emphatically that the conference will reach a successful conclusion, but he has provided for protection of American interests, should the conference fail, as he expects.

Delay of the final plenary session at Geneva brought only a faint ray of hope that the deadlock over Great Britain's proposal for a larger navy might be broken. It is, however, untrue that Mr. Coolidge wired Gibson last night to end the conference.

But failure of the conference means further defeat to Mr. Coolidge's program of economy, in naval warfare construction as well as in the government, and he has manifest unusual interest in the outcome of the meeting.

Victor McBurnes spent Sunday afternoon in Preble visiting friends.
