He Was Washed Ashore

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

SLOSH—WOSH— Slosh—wosh— Jim came to with a start. He sat up gripping both sides of the skiff. The dickens! He was adrift and already several feet from shore. The rope must have come untied from the anchor. Yes, there it was, trailing. But it looked as if—by Jove, it had been cut!

Probably by the read-headed kid back there on the beach, jumping up and down and laughing at him. Wait until he got hold of him.

Thoroughly awakened by this time, Jim examined the boat in which he had so casually allowed himself to take a nap. There were no oars and nothing detachable that might serve as oars. He must either jump overboard and swim, thereby doing considerable damage to his clothes, or else resign himself to the situation.

The outer rim of the small cove was fringed with small islands, some of them grassy and tree clad, others rocky and bare, and one with a house on it.

Chances were that he would eventually bump one of those islands, or could pick up a bit of driftwood and paddle himself to the mainland, signal the occupant of the house.

Not until the skiff's side actually grated on the shoal did Jim feel altogether certain, however, that he was actually going to strike the bit of land with a house on it.

He heaved a sigh of relief, lifted his eyes, then gasped all but audibly. Above him, obviously amused, was quite the prettiest girl he had ever seen.

Then it flashed upon him that she might possibly be alone upon the island, and, if so, the advent of a strange man would most certainly be annoying. She spoke first.

"I have been watching you, wondering if you would make a good landing. You see—my husband will be back here any moment with the boat and will be glad to take you back. I take it you accidentally got afloat."

"You've said it!" cried Jim gaily. "A little red-headed devil cut the rope while I was taking a nap. You see, I was—er—waiting for my—er—wife"—there, that would make it better all around. If she had a husband and he had a wife, the thought of them ought to act as sufficient chaperonage.

"That's what it looked like. That is, I don't mean it looked as if you were waiting for a wife, but as if you were adrift. Won't—won't you come up and wait until my—my husband returns? He's out fishing—there, I think you can see his boat out near that buoy?" She indicated a tiny black spot out towards the horizon. "He'll be starting home presently."

So, for two hours that passed all too swiftly, they sat getting acquainted while the sun sank lower and lower. If the girl was good to look upon, no less, in his own masculine way, was Jim. And they discovered a kindred taste in books, marine engines and radio announcers.

"What a pity," thought the girl, "that every nice young man I meet is always married!"
And "what a shame," thought Jim, "that the only girl I ever knew I could love has a husband!" but they did not speak aloud what was in their minds.

No engrossed did they become in nearthing mutual congenialities that the speck near the horizon had grown to a sizable object easily to be made out as a boat with a single occupant, before either became aware of its approach.

The figure it held was a slim one, khaki clad.

"Needs a haircut!" was Jim's unspoken comment as he glimpsed a tawny mop that matched the sunset.

Then he noticed that his pretty companion was folding and unfolding her slender hands nervously.

"Mr.—er—" she began.

"Jim Murdock," supplied Jim promptly.

"Well—why didn't you say so to start with?" cried the girl. "My sister, who is staying at the hotel, has told me all about you. And about the book you are writing. But—" and she looked at him accusingly. "She distinctly said you were a bachelor!"

"I am," said Jim meekly. "I invented a wife just to save you embarrassment. Thought you might not mind so much my unceremonious intrusion if you thought—"

He was interrupted by a silvery burst of laughter. "How funny!" cried the girl. "I invented a husband for similar reasons. I realized right afterward that sooner or later you'd find out, but I thought for the moment it would suffice. In reality, that person in the boat is my Aunt Agatha, the most indefatigable fisherman in Sheltered Cove!"

That night the telephone in the home of red-headed Billy Masters rang stridently. His mother answered, then turned in amazement to her son who had been watching his mother nervously.

"I don't understand," she said. "A man from the drug store has just called up and said that a gentleman has left orders that every day for a month you are to be given a chocolate ice cream soda charged to his account!"

Kansas Governor Makes Tour Of State In Plane

Wichita, Kansas. —(INS)—What is believed will be the first complete tour of a state by its governor in an airplane will be undertaken by Governor Ben S. Paulen, of Kansas, early this Spring, he announced here.

The tour will be made in a Travel-Air monoplane the Governor having accepted the offer of the company to use one of its planes and pilot. The Travel Air Corp. is a Kansas concern with factory here.

The Governor plans to make an extensive trip which will take him to every sizeable town in the state. He expects to gain first hand, knowledge of agricultural, economical, social and political conditions in all sections.

Five-Acre Field Of Corn Yields 106 Bu. Per Acre

Franklin, Ind., Nov. 22.—(INS)—A corn yield of 106 bushels an acre, on a five acre field, has been harvested by Chandis Herring Johnson county farmer, who used seed which was first tested for imperfections.

The ground on which the corn was grown was clover sod which was turned early in the spring. The corn was planted in May.

Cops Pinch Autos That Violate Law

Portland, Ore., —(UP)—Arresting the car and making it a prisoner is the answer of Portland's police force to the traffic problem.

After a car has been parked the limit, a police tow car comes and takes it away.

When the system was first started the police were buried with stolen car complaints. An investigation, in most instances, revealed that the supposed thieves were policemen doing their duty.
