Winston Churchill Shows Superstition

London. — (UP) — Winston Churchill, chancellor of the exchequer, is superstitious.

This was revealed during a speech on trade at Wansted when Churchill interrupted himself to knock on wood as he said, "I don't want to prophesy but I think that on the whole, you will find that things are going to get better."

The chancellor is also superstitious, according to his intimate friends, about the number thirteen. It is said that at one time he had a number of articles which all bore the number thirteen. He had them all altered. He also objects to sitting down with thirteen at the table, always trying to contrive to get another guest when this emergency arises.

New Goshen—Paul Mooter, 22, walking about the mine where he was working accidentally stepped off into a 235 foot shaft. He was killed instantly. Darkness was believed the cause.
