Coolidge Says He Will Veto Flood Control Bill

Washington, April 23.—(INS)—President Coolidge served an ultimatum on Congress today that he would veto the Jones-Reid $335,000,000 flood control bill unless it is modified to meet his demands for a heavier contribution by the affected states.
This notice was conveyed to the House by Rep. Madden (R) of Illinois, who held a conference at the White House while House leaders were trying to effect a compromise with the so-called river bloc.
The President will make no further concessions, Madden declared, he predicted that congress would sustain a veto if Mr. Coolidge refused to sign the bill.

WILKINS FAILS TO FIND LAND AT NORTH POLE

on the ice.
(Wilkins' trip of exploration over the top of this world was made for the sole purpose of trying to determine whether there was land where Admiral Peary thought he saw it. Wilkins purposely flew south of the North Pole, instead of across it, to carry out the scientific object of his flight.)
Captain Wilkins took his last observation about 200 miles from Svalbard but visibility then became bad.
Near Svalbard (the Spitzbergen Archipelago) there was open sea.
Captain Wilkins knew he was near land by two pointed mountain tops he saw on Prince Karl's (Charles) forehead, near Svalbard.
Then, with land in sight, a terrific snowstorm started.
Wilkins and Eielson knew they must land quickly. But landing was made difficult by the gale.
With consummate skill, Eielson managed to bring the plane to earth on Doedmansoer Island (Dead Man's Island). The plane stopped dead after a run of only 30 feet in loose snow.
The plane was not damaged.
Wilkins and Eielson had flown 20 1/2 hours at a speed of more than 110 miles an hour.
For steering, Captain Wilkins found the ordinary magnetic compass most serviceable. He used a sun compass, too.
Wilkins had a special map of the North Pole region prepared by the American Geographical Society, under whose sponsorship the flight was made.
The map was divided into 24 one-hour parts; longitude was divided into five-hour parts.
He had been able to obtain only the crudest kind of map of Svalbard, so his navigation must be considered marvelous, since he landed in a swirling snowstorm, only about 50 miles south of his destination—Kings Bay. There Wilkins expected to meet General Umberto Nobile, who is planning polar exploration this year in the dirigible Italia.
Wilkins hopes to tell General Nobile about his experiences and the route so Nobile can plan his trip over some of the route which has not yet been flown over.
Wilkins and Eielson were forced to stay five days on Dead Man's Island because of unusually bad weather for this time of the year.
Snowstorm followed snowstorm, with the direction of the wind continually changing, and the average temperature 25 degrees below zero Fahrenheit.
About 3 a.m. Saturday the weather cleared and Wilkins and Eielson began to think of reaching civilization.
Until then the only things the pair could do were to eat and sleep and remain huddled up in the monoplane. It gave them a good rest but they had heavy work in front of them before they could start their airplane, which had been almost covered with snow.
Moreover, the gasoline supply was so low that fuel had to be pumped in to the higher tanks so the plane could be made ready for starting.
Three times the engine was started at full speed, but the monoplane refused to budge.
The third time Captain Wilkins tried to help loosen the plane from the snow. He got out of the plane but held tight to a rope tied to the seat in the machine so he would be able to get back.
Finally the plane started to move but it was sometime before Wilkins was able to climb aboard.
When he was able to climb into the plane, Wilkins shouted: "On board again."

There was a fresh snow fall over the week end and the wind was high a great deal of the time. Visitors from the Labrador mainland crossed the ice to see if the relief plane had arrived and to say farewell to the trans-Atlantic airmen in the event they had started final repair work on the Bremen.
The plane has been covered as well as possible to protect it from intermittent snow storms. Baron Von Huenefeld said that the motor was in excellent condition and has not suffered from the intense cold that prevails here, especially at night.
