have been overheard. Despite these reports, however, funeral services for the Belgian banker will be held in Brussels tomorrow. Believe Fortune Overestimated Brussels, July 10.—(INS)—With legal formalities under way to establish "death by accident" in the strange disappearance of Capt. Alfred Loewenstein, Belgian financier, it was reported here today that, when the Loewenstein estate is finally settled, it will be found that the wealth of the so-called croesus was greatly exaggerated.

At the height of his fame, when he visited the United States six months ago with all the pomp of a fabulously rich potentate, he was rated by sensational newspaper writers as the third richest man in the world. He was put in the class with Henry Ford and John D. Rockefeller.

The mysterious disappearance of the capitalist on Wednesday evening, while flying from London to Brussels, has led to inquiry into some of his financial deals during the past ten months and it was learned from reliable sources that he had lost heavily. In some quarters Loewenstein's present wealth is rated at not more than $25,000,000, which is regarded as "moderate" in comparison with the riches of many American millionaires.

THROAT DISEASE INFESTS VILLAGE

Lee, Mass., July 10.—(UP)—The epidemic of septic throat infection which has taken a dozen lives here in the last week was believed to have reached a crisis today with 600 of the town's 4,000 population affected.

A strict quarantine has been imposed on the village by state and local health authorities.

Public gatherings have been banned, restaurants have been ordered to close at 8 p. m. Persons recently ill are barred from the streets, and all funerals must be private.

Police also have issued orders against congregations on the streets, house-to-house canvassing, loitering in public places, and visits to the high school except on official business.

Four more physicians, accompanied by four nurses, arrived here last night in response to an appeal from the Red Cross. Eighteen patients were removed last night to the Rice school, which is serving as an emergency hospital.

The epidemic, now in its second week, has definitely been traced to the town's milk supply.

DRAMATIC STORY OF CRASH OF DIRIGIBLE

crashed. Nobile was knocked unconscious as nine other men were brushed from engine cabins to the ice. Nobile finally awakened and found Finn Malmgren and Captain Adalberto Mariano lying beside him.

Vincenzo Pomella, an engine man, approached and attempted to aid Malmgren and Mariano. As he bent over the two he fell dead.

The remaining nine men sought their bed-bags. Apparently they were ready to die. Later, however, they regained strength and started moving about on the flat, rough ice where the dirigible had collided. The envelope of the craft had floated away, carrying six other men with it.

Malmgren started immediately to erect a radio on a hammock. For two days Malmgren attempted to communicate with the outside world. After failing in this, Malmgren, Mariano and Captain Filippo Zanpi—disregarding the advice of Nobile—decided to attempt to reach North Cape. The last Nobile saw of the men they were enroute in the direction of Foyin Island.

Just before Malmgren departed, however, he shot a bear with a revolver, firing five shots into the big polar animal at a distance of five meters. The flesh was used as food while the hide was used to cover the bed bags which were strewn out on the hard ice. The hide served somewhat as a protection from the bitterly cold north winds that swept across the dismal encampment.

Supplies were low and after Malmgren left a constant watch was kept for bears to add to the meager larder. The next bear sighted however was chased away by Nobile's pet terrier, Titiana, and bit it on the leg.

It was interesting to note that for the first three days after the crash Titiana—the dog that has accompanied Nobile on every trip he has made in recent years—refused to approach its master.

Life on the ice encampment was most difficult. Cooking utensils were made from petrol tanks. Petrol was used as fuel until it was exhausted and after that everything burnable was used, including expensive cameras that had been taken on the polar flight.

Food chiefly was bear meat, pemmican and occasionally small rations of chocolate. Bears were numerous. Titiana often chased the animals away, scampering along after them on the dangerous ice.

The men naturally were eager to get in communication with the outside world. The radio had been set up and Giuseppe Biagi, the radio operator, kept constantly at the controls attempting to attract northern stations. Nobile promised him a plate of chocolate when he first established an outside connection and said he would receive an extra chocolate when he communicated with the first Russian station.

The first plane sighted was that of Captain H. Riiser-Larsen, Norwegian flyer. The men burned a packet and later used petrol cans to reflect the sun in an attempt to attract the Norwegian's attention. These attempts failed. Later when Major Maddalena, Italian ace, flew over the encampment Natale Cececoni—who subsequently died of injuries at the encampment—laid on the ice and moved one of the petrol tanks about so that they could attract the flier's notice.

The men of course, had nothing to do on the encampment, save wait for rescue or whatever fate might be theirs. However, they busied themselves with making oceanographic researches and also of making supplies. Among the various instruments made was a sled from materials of the wrecked Italia cabin.

It was said that although Nobile had objected to the separation of the Malmgren party that they parted the best of friends and that Nobile embraced each member just before the trio started on the walk from which they have never returned.

Also it was learned that Lieutenant Alfredo Viglieri, who assumed charge after Nobile was rescued by Lieut. Elnor-Paul Lundborg, was greatly responsible for keeping the morale of the men at a high standard.

SEN. ROBINSON ISSUES WARNING

talk" about the strategy and tactics of this campaign.

Senator Robinson wants the Democrats to establish headquarters in the south and conduct a campaign, just as they always have conducted campaigns in the north and east and west. If Gov. Alfred E. Smith and the national committee adopt his views, it will be the first time in history that the party has considered it necessary to conduct a southern campaign.

"Too much stress," said Senator Robinson today, "cannot be laid upon the value of an organization that shall extend its activities to every part of the country."

"I would like to have the national committee consider the establishment of a bureau or headquarters at some central point in one of the southern states for the direction of the campaign in the south."

"Conditions in that section are very different from those which have prevailed in other national campaigns."

"An organized effort is in progress in several southern states to defeat the national democratic ticket, and while the force and volume of this movement is not yet known, I am of the opinion that sound policy should prompt our party managers to meet this opposition decisively and promptly."

MINE WORKERS HOLD MEETING

Indianapolis, July 10.—(UP)—The international executive board of the United Mine Workers of America met in closed session in the offices of President John L. Lewis here today. Lewis said the meeting was called to "review the strike situation in various bituminous coal fields." It was said also that the meeting would consider "proposed federal legislation dealing with the bituminous coal industry."

It was thought that a statement regarding the general mine situation would be issued from the meeting sometime this afternoon.

Tomorrow a policy committee will be held. The policy committee is composed of representatives from each district organization of the United Mine Workers in United States and Canada, members of the international executive board, and the executive officers of the union. It was not known whether the meeting would consider the recent demand of the United Mine Workers of Illinois, which asked that the Illinois organization be released from restrictions of the international union policy committee.
