SEVEN MEMBERS OF ITALIA CREW ABOARD KRASSIN

from the Krassin.

The messages were interpreted as saying that Malmgren's body had been found. Today further messages from the Krassin left this, and even the question whether Malmgren actually was known to be dead, a matter of uncertainty.

In the second group she picked up—at the Italia ice camp off Foy Island—the Krassin reported that there were five men. They were:

Lieut. Alfredo Viglieri, joint navigator of the Italia, in command; Prof. F. Behounek, of Czechoslovakia, radiologist; Felice Trojani, aeronautical engineer; Giuseppe Biagi, radio operator, and Natale Cecioni, chief engineer.

Cecioni had been severely injured when the Italia crashed to the ice May 25. A thigh had been broken and he had suffered other injuries.

Last Saturday the report was published generally that Cecioni had died. Subsequently a denial of the death was published at Rome. But it was said merely that nothing had been heard of Cecioni's death. Magnetic storms had cut off all communication with the ice camp's radio.

Meanwhile, Lieut. Einar Paul Lundborg and Lieut. Birger Schyberg who had returned by airplane to the rescue ship Quest from the camp, told friends privately that Cecioni had died. They said he had been taken out of the little tent in which he had been cared for so that he could be the next to go by airplane back to civilization. But he could not be taken aboard, it was said, and was left over night on the ice, where he died.

There had been no clarification of the conflicting reports, until the Krassin radioed today that Cecioni, like the others, was aboard her. She said that Cecioni was suffering from his thigh, but that it was healing satisfactorily.

The other four men from the camp, the Krassin said, were well, though exhausted after an ordeal such as few men in history have withstood.

All seven rescued men aboard the Krassin are under the care of physicians, who are feeding them cautiously, until they have become used to ordinary food after weeks of trying to masticate, with swollen mouths, the frozen pemmican that was almost their only diet.

Lieut. Mariano, who with Zappi was picked up first; and Cecioni, of the ice camp group, are in the ships hospital, the Krassin reported.

The other rescued men in the Krassin—Zappi, Viglieri, Behounek, Troiani and Biagi—are wandering about the ship as in a dream, the Krassin radioed. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say as if awakened to a wonderful world after a 42-day nightmare.

All are bubbling with a joy that keeps them at the highest pitch of excitement.

Throughout the ship, the radio said in one of its series of messages there is jubilation rejoicing.

But at their stations, as the Krassin continues her triumphant voyage, are lookouts straining their eyes for sight of the next group to be rescued.

Each bid shall be accompanied with affidavit and bonds as provided by law. A bid may also be submitted for the completion of all the above bridges. The time for completion of said bridges will be set at the time of letting contract. The Board reserves the right to reject any or all bids.
