Slow at First but—
Roe is twelve and delights in large words. When he attended his first evening party, his mother was curious to know how the evening was spent, and whether he had a good time. "Well, at first it was pretty slow," he reported, "but toward the last it got quite light-harious!"

SMITH PLANS

FUTURE TRIPS

Says Views Are Identical
Muskegon, Okla., Oct. 4—(U.P.)—Herbert Hoover and Gov. Alfred E. Smith apparently have identically the same views on prohibition, Senator Joseph T. Robinson, Democratic nominee for vice-president, said in his third Oklahoma address here last night.

"I agree with every word of Hoover's acceptance declaration against modification that allegedly amounts to nullification," Robinson said, "and do not understand that Gov. Smith takes any different view."

"The point is that it is a far fetched construction to say that Mr. Hoover's expression is a declaration against modification of the constitution respecting prohibition."

Says Men Seek Beauty, Cash; Women Dependability

Modern matchmaker is shown above at his desk, where he sorts out applicants for loving mates and pairs them off into likely matches. Above, prospectus which the canny Mr. Rubin somehow manages to get into the hands of likely clients, and, below, Queen Marie of Rumania, who also has a knack for matchmaking.

Helpful Mr. Rubin Tells How He Serves as Aid to Dan Cupid

(INS)—
New York.—Romance makes the world go 'round. In the lexicon of Louis Rubin, No. 391 Hinsdale street, Brooklyn, no word in the English language is half so important. Though the modest sign outside his office in the quiet, old residential thoroughfare proclaims to all and sundry that here is a 'modern business exchange,' wherein one may deal in real estate, traffic in mortgages and loans, the real business of its wizened, little proprietor is—Romance.

For—
Rubin is an official aid to Cupid, an efficiency expert who is second to none in analyzing affairs of the heart. Would you like a nice, attractive wife, possibly one with enough money to enable you to go into business for yourself? Or a stalwart, promising husband to love, cherish and protect you?

Just Place Your Order
Yes? Then you can place your order with the experienced—and understanding—Mr. Rubin, whose success as a marriage broker has amazed all who know him. The chances are nine in ten that he will find a mate for you.

How does this dealer in nuptial bliss operate? What is his procedure from the time a bashful girl or an up and coming young man enters his office and admits that a suitable mate would be extremely welcome? The answer is simple. The broker merely consults his Twentieth Century files, studies the records there disclosed and requests his caller to be patient for a couple of days.

Rubin's next step is to entrust the prospective bridegroom with the lady's address and phone number in order that a meeting may be arranged—never, however, in his office. That flavor of practicality might brush the bloom off a budding romance. After the couple get to know each other (and this usually requires two or three meetings), Rubin ascertains whether they have found things in common, whether they are attracted to each other. If both believe that marriage is conceivable, the broker receives his fee, the size of the honorarium being governed by the financial state of the couple.

Agrees With Queen Marie
Like the matchmaking Queen Marie of Rumania, the little broker in Hinsdale street, clings to the opinion that Cupid isn't merely so unerring a marksman as reputed. The little god frequently has to have a hand up as

The Level Road
The peril of the level way is greater than the peril of the hills. There is nothing more exhausting than a dead level stretch, unbroken by change. More people break down beneath the monotony of life than beneath its changes. There is scarcely a greater achievement than the victory of the man who keeps fresh and vigorous on the level road.
