ON THE SIDELINES
THE BIG TEN

South Bend, Ind.—The largest crowd in history is expected here Saturday when Notre Dame meets Carnegie Tech. All available seats, about 35,000 have been sold. Ideal weather yesterday caused Knute Rockne to give the regulars a good workout although rest had been scheduled.

Champaign, Ill.—"They're looking better," said Zuppke yesterday as the Illini finished a practice session in preparation for the Chicago game Saturday. Dwight Stuessy, veteran quarterback, was back in the pilot position after being out with injuries.

Columbus—With many first stringers out of the game, Ohio State is practicing in secret for the final game of the season against Illinois. Saturday Ohio meets Muskingum College and few first team men are expected to be used in the starting lineup.

Evanston, Ill.—A new Northwestern lineup may face Indiana at Bloomington next Saturday. Coach Hanley is not satisfied with the team as it stands and hopes to make its attack more diversified.

Bloomington, Ind.—Indiana went through a hard scrimmage session yesterday preparing for the Purple. Virtually every man on the first squad got a taste of the intensive drill. Coach Page announced a similar session for today.

Chicago—A new spirit pervaded the University of Chicago yesterday as the team started practice for the Illinois game this week-end. Troused by Wisconsin last week. The Maroons have hopes of upsetting the dope this week.

Minneapolis—Coach Spears is perfecting an aerial game for the Minnesota team, it having been weak in that department so far this year. Intensive drill on passes yesterday was preceded by a long lecture on the subject.

Lafayette, Ind.—Five regulars on the sidelines, Coach Phelan is taking no chances on losing the Wabash game next Saturday. Scrimmage and considerable skill drill is on the schedule for the rest of the week for the Boiler-makers.

PLAN TO REVISE
LAW ON TARIFF

They point jointly to the fact that tariff revision was mentioned by Hoover and the republican platform as the primary principle of farm relief, and they agree the farm relief question cannot possibly be solved in the rush of routine business before March.

Farm representatives want a protective tariff on hides, onions, eggs, vegetables and fruits to encourage diversification of American farm production. Some of them want a much higher tariff on corn to shut out Argentine competition. They are dissatisfied with the work of the tariff commission, powers of which have been considered inadequate to meet the situation because the law provides the commission may increase existing duties only 50 per cent.

Industrialists want the tariff on some of their products increased, and see their chance to get action presently. They believe they can take advantage of what they regard as a protective wave over the country as a result of the republican victory in the election.

Democrats generally agree with the westerners but disagree with the industrialists. The democrats want to lower tariffs on many industrial products hence they too are wholeheartedly for bringing up that almost-abandoned legislative subject.

Representative expressions of the sentiments of the various groups were given the United Press by Senators Borah, Repn., Idaho; Reed, Repn., Pa.; Brookhart, Repn., Iowa; McMaster, Repn., S. D.; and Harrison, Dem., Miss. Reed was the only one who did not favor an extra session but he wanted the tariff revised.

"Even the McNary-Haugen bill would not have been enough without tariff revision," Brookhart said. "We won't have time to do it in the short session but we will do it in the extra session."

Government Continues To Secure Theft Evidence

Indianapolis, Nov. 14.—(U.P.)—The government today continued its attempt to convict 15 defendants on trial here in connection with an alleged interstate automobile theft ring.

With 30 witnesses heard Tuesday the prosecution was to present approximately 50 persons to testify. The case was not expected to be in the hands of the jury before Friday evening.

Mark Rhoades, head of the auto license division of the Indiana secretary of state office, the first witness today said blank certificates of title were stolen from the auto license division office at the state house and used on some of the stolen cars.

Rhoades said the titles were kept in the title file room at the state house and that 50 persons had access to the room.

Georgia Tech Has Great Trick Play

That popular figure in Southern football Coach Bill Alexander of Georgia Tech, is a keen student. His stunt of playing his quarterback toward center was as brilliant an idea for Tech as ever was the old Hesiman shift. The latter got by mostly because of lax rules and lax opposition. Bill now puts it over by dint of sound methods even if the opposition is strong. His stunt of being the first to down Alabama last season was a neat bit of football.

When Alabama comes to Atlanta Saturday to meet the Golden Tornado, Coach Wade's men will have this well-conceived play, among others, to worry about. Ball is snapped to No. 1, the quarterback who takes it through his legs from center while back to back with the center. He next goes through all the motions of handing it to back No. 2, who bucks straight ahead and thus commands the immediate attention of the defensive full and center.

Meantime end No. 6 and back No. 4 go pell mell into Wade's left tackle while back No. 3, at top speed, dodges inside the defensive left end and deploys himself in cutting down the defensive wing back of that side, after faking the ball to No. 2. No. 1 runs around the defensive left end, apparently even though that gent has not been disposed of. "This is a cinch," says this end, as tackling end feeling a glow of pride in the achievement.

But he has failed to note that Tech's left end, No. 5 has swung around wide and just as he tackles No. 1, No. 1 tosses No. 5 the ball. Ladies and gentlemen, that play goes like a whirlwind.

"Some lateral pass, a beauty," said Georgia's coach when he first saw it. Tomorrow—what Pit takes to Nebraska.

VESTRIS TELL

sunk was not cleared up. Some thought it might have been due to the shifting of cargo. The survivor, O. L. Maxey, of Richmond, Va., believed a bulkhead broke after the ship began to leak, and prevented efforts to pump her out of water.

Those in the lifeboat picked up by the Berlin were adrift for 14 hours, without food except water and crackers, and suffering from cold. The lifeboat, survivors said, had no rudder, and they were unable to help themselves much beyond keeping the lifeboat headed into the waves, waiting for a rescue boat.

Some of them swam alongside the sinking Vestris for nearly half an hour before they got aboard the lifeboat.

The boat picked up by the Berlin was the third launched from the Vestris. The first two were those that capsized on being lowered.

The third broke away while still empty and before being completely lowered. Arch Bannister, negro boat-swain's mate, performed the heroic act that saved many lives. He leaped into the sea, captured the drifting lifeboat and called to those on deck to jump. He maneuvered the boat in the waves until he had picked up the 22 who, with himself, were rescued by the Berlin. All were men.

Maxey criticized the ship's officers for not sending out an SOS Sunday night.

"Capt. Carey seemed undecided and did not seem to know what to do," the Virginia man said.

"We ran into a hurricane at midnight Saturday and by Sunday morning the Vestris showed a decided list. I believe the bulkhead broke but I am not certain. Everyone seemed calm."

"The list was so bad on Sunday that the bird cages broke from the walls of the dining room. Captain Carey ordered all of the passengers on the deck that morning."

Maxey described the launching of the three life boats and the heroism of Bannister.

"I swam for about 45 minutes before being picked up," he said.

"The life boats leaked. There were holes in every one of them and we spent most of the time bailing out water. We had nothing in the boat except crackers and water."

Another man who swam for 30 to 45 minutes before being rescued was Adams, the first engineer, who said he was the next to the last man to leave the vessel.

"Captain Carey was the last man to leave," Adams said. "I believe our chief radio operator, O'Loughlin, drowned. I could hear the radio sputtering up to the time I jumped into the water."

Adams was reticent about discussing the sinking of the Vestris and said he would make a complete report to the company.

"I do not know the cause," he told the United Press. "Our sea valve was working perfectly. I know that we did not hit any submerged wreck-ages."

He ventured the opinion that perhaps the cargo might have shifted, but said he had not foundation for his belief.

Adams took charge of the crew of the little life boat after he had been picked up. C. E. Mack, an electrical engineer of Teckla, Wyo., said.

"We had no rudder and had to row about in the same position for almost all the time until we were rescued by the Berlin," Mack said.

The Berlin, Mack continued, was the first of the rescue vessels to reach the scene.

"Through the night we could see the flares sent up from the Berlin but we had no answering flares and had to remain in the boat, just watching until dawn," Mack reported.

"Once we had the thought of hooking out life boat to several others which were circling about us. That was impossible. We had no rudder to direct our boat and had nothing to make the hook up. We could shout to the people in the other boats."

Mack said the first part of the Vestris to be flooded was the boiler room. It began to fill Sunday after the ship had developed its serious starboard list after the gale Saturday night.

"Several of us stood waiting on the deck while the boats were being filled," Carlos Quiros, chancellor of the Argentine embassy in Washington, said.

"I personally saw that one boat had a hole in it. I saw the sailors trying frantically to nail a board across that hole and I saw that boat sink 100 feet from the ship's side, throwing 60 persons into the sea."

"I, and those who were beside me, leaped into the sea and swam about. The water was not cold fortunately nor was it very rough at that moment."

"Squawman"

The word "squawman" has two meanings. One is an Indian who does a woman's work; the other, the one which is more often meant, a white man married to an Indian woman and living with her people.

"KONJOLA WAS

SAYS MAN OF 69System Was Run Down And Full Of Poisons—New Medicine
One Only One To Help Him

MR. WILLIAM V. DESMOND

When all else has failed; when the hope of regaining health fades; when the sufferer is about to give up—in thousands of such cases Konjola, the new and different medicine with its 22 herb and root juices, affects quick and lasting recoveries. There is much of hope for all who suffer in the words of Mr. William V. Desmond, 311 West Broadway, Kokomo, Indiana, who declares:

"Chronic constipation and miserable indigestion had undermined my health, and my system was full of poisons. I tried medicine upon medicine, but got no better. I had begun to fear that at my age, 69, there was little or no hope for relief. As I read about the wonderful success of Konjola, I resolved to see if this remedy would help me. It surely did. Within three weeks, my system was completely cleansed of poisons, constipation disappeared and my stomach put in fine shape. I am well and hearty, and enjoying life like I did years ago. What a wonderful work in the world there is for Konjola."

Konjola's fame rests upon thousands of cases like this; new and glorious health through this super-remedy when all else had failed.

Konjola is sold in Decatur, Ind., at Smith, Yager & Falk's drug store and by all the best druggists throughout this section.

the taxpayers, although that is obvious.

"There is no reason why a sane-minded first offender should be sent away without giving him or her a chance to try again. Oftentimes they learn things by contact with hardened persons behind the prison walls that cause them to continue on the downward path with great detriment to society."

"Could they be saved by a single chance, surely it is advisable to give it to them."

"No state or society should imprison persons out of a mere spirit of revenge."

That the building programs asked by the various penal institutions are sorely needed is shown in pleas attached to the budgets by the superintendents.

The Michigan City state prison requests a new cell house to cost $159,800 and a $30,000 factory building. It was pointed out that 415 prisoners are now sleeping in factory buildings, two-thirds in dormitories and only 570, less than one-third, in proper cells.

At the Indiana state farm, Greencastle, two new dormitories to cost $25,000, an $18,500 industrial building and a $25,000 chapel are requested. Here also attention is called to overcrowding.

Superintendent Andrew F. Miles asks a $45,000 dormitory and $40,000 trade school at Indiana state reformatory.
