DECATUR MAN DISCUSSES LAW AND MORAN REFORM

form of law but in the enforcement of it we have miserably failed. We are today confronted with this great task; the task of vitalizing this great movement into the hearts and minds of the human factors of our nation. We must cultivate the spirit of moral reform. For years we have experimented and gained some good but in another sense our experimentation has been costly. Thousands have died from the ill effects of poisonous, intoxicating liquors; thousands remain with us bodily but have died mentally and spiritually, and therefore, the progress of our great democracy is based upon the replenishing of the minds of those least affected, as well as the guidance of those who have not yet fallen.

"How can we accomplish our aim? It is my belief that the educators of childhood and youth can, if they have the vision and desire, be the strongest force for national prohibition among our agencies of reform. There can be no doubt that the school is a national factor of potent force, and it is within the power of its teachers to use it for the destruction of the healing of this nation. It is a sacred trust, a dynamic concept, and if we are to be faithful to it we must realize ourselves as national citizens whose task it is to integrate its moral and spiritual forces. To the school is given the privilege of seeing a common humanity sanctified and made pure in the child it educates. The school in modern society is the social unit for the exercise and development of that we term humanism.

"Men cannot be redeemed merely by maxims neither can universal good will be achieved by preaching. Our moral edifice must be slowly and patiently built in the concrete. The school provides the social organization for the exercise of a concrete morality and the realization of vitalizing social service. The school sees a living personality, in which body and soul are one, in which there is no divorcement of the inward convictions and outward actions, and in which full growth depends upon the balanced development of all its elements. The school is the idealized model of the world and the world will become the realized model of the school."

"Children during this age form their habits for life, for parenthood, and for society. Therefore we can see the importance of the school in this period of moral reform. Our nation to overcome the drink habit must cease its desire for this poison, and the accomplishment of this task rests upon the educational facilities of our nation. Our school books, our literature, our fiction must contain not the occasional glory of a drunken fool but instead the eternal happiness of a total abstainer.

"Psychologists affirm that the ideals of the child are practically fixed by the time he is six years of age. During these years the influence of the mother must be firm and decided. We are in danger of forgetting that character building is the most vital problem confronting our race. If America as a nation fails it will not be because she lacks physical power, nor economic superiority, but because she does lack moral valor. If she fails she will fail at the point of character. To prevent a national calamity, to prevent the habits of drink, the mothers and fathers of America must do more intensive gardening in youth.

We cannot escape the fundamental truth that if a child's will is anchored in basic principles it is usually because his home is founded upon them, that if he possesses qualities of goodness as a man it is because a woman has done her work well.

"You may pass laws to regulate public gambling houses, but fortunes will rise and fall at the gaming table until the mother controls the vice at her own fireside. You may punish crime behind prison walls, but men will do wrong so long as they are born of ignorant mothers and reared in immoral home. The home is still the bulwark of our nation. True strength can come to a nation only as the spirit of the ideal home prevades the whole life of the people. Our sublime mission is then the betterment of the homes of our nation and the immediate demand for moral reform."

DECATUR BOY SCOUT LEAVES FOR JAMBOREE IN ENGLAND

at Rome City, found that his uniforms for the European trip were too small, and he was the "busiest boy in America" for about two days exchanging his uniform. Finally, he received a wire that it would be necessary to send east for the uniforms, but the manufacturing company assured him that his Jamboree suits would be at the boat in Canada tomorrow before sailing time.

The boys to make the trip from the local area were selected on their work as Scouts and their ability as leaders. The area scoutmaster made the final appointments, and the local young man is the first ever to attend an international Jamboree. Jimmie and young Price are the two youngest Scouts from Indiana, and as far as is known, the two youngest from the United States to attend the Jamboree.
