This Human Business

Possibly the popularity of the telephone—domestic as well as transatlantic—is due to the touch of personality as much as to speed. We work best man to man, when we can feel personality and measure human reactions.—Magazine of Business.

Some Centipede

A very young centipede entered the branch library and asked the librarian in charge: "Where can I find 'Twenty Thousand Legs Beneath the Sea'?"

ROYAL ONTARIO MUSEUM TO BE MADE LARGER

Many Valuables Cramped Too Closely In Toronto Building

Toronto, Ont., June 13—(UP)—Many exhibits of ancient armor and weapons, Chinese antiques, and mineral and geological specimens, now gathered dust in the basement of the Doyal Ontario Museum here, will come to light when contemplated additions to the museum are completed.

The present museum building contains a wealth of rarities, but its three large floors are cramped, with many cases of exhibits standing back-to-back.

The board of trustees has been obliged to turn down offers of many additional presents to the museum. Perhaps the most imposing of these preferred gifts is a complete abyssinian room, offered by the Emperor of Abyssinia. The trustees have been advised that this room will be shipped as soon as the museum can accommodate it.

Plans for an additional building, adjoining the present museum, have been ordered drawn. The new building will provide 134,000 square feet of space for exhibits.

AMERICAN HOTEL IN JERUSALEM IS THING OF PAST

Proprietress of Unusual Establishment Finally Closes Doors

By Jacob B. Simon
UP Special Correspondent
Jerusalem, June 13—(UP)—The last fork has clattered on the table. The cup clinks no longer in its saucer. The little fat German who was long on culture, and longer on moustache is gone.

The Jerusalem-American hotel is no more.

To the American who spends his summers in his garden and his winters growing at the janitor, the passing of this famous institution will mean nothing. But to the American who roams over strange lands it means he can no longer get grapefruit here even if it was occasionally served with the wrong eating utensil.

The hotel, better known as the "Stars and Stripes," was unusual in that only the American tongue was spoken. Of course, if the proprietress felt it necessary to order groceries in Americanized Hebrew, it was hastily overlooked.

It was the only place in Jerusalem where one could read American magazines. A three week's old newspaper from the states created excitement.

To the traveling American it was the intellectual oasis of the land. There was always an air of expectation about it. One never knew on approaching it that a man was there from Cincinnati, O., who had all the late news from "over the Rhine." Even if you knew only enough about Cincinnati to know you couldn't spell it, you listened to the latest gossip.

Then there was the leading denlist, an American, who lived at the Stars and Stripes after his home was looted last August. He dusted the moss over anecdotes that were new when he last visited the states 16 years ago and brought them out for inspection and laughter.

If a newcomer told a joke the dentist jotted it down. Future patients will hear it while their molars are being polished or pulled.

The little, fat German who banged his fork on the table and announced angrily that the only culture the Americans had was that which they stole from Germany, always provided amusement and argument.

For gossip one went to the lady who kept the beauty shop, which was visited by Christians, Arabs and Jews. You were not to become excited if she said casually "the three wives of Muhammed Effendi came to me this morning, they decided to copy the Jews and are not going to have their nails mended."

Provided you didn't question her, she probably would add "there is likely to be terrible trouble when they get home. I'm afraid I shall lose three good clients."

The hotel finally was abandoned because the proprietress wanted a rest, the officers who came to Palestine after the disturbances wanted an officers' mess and she was told by the American consulate-general that the presumption of having ceased to be an American citizen would arise against her in the event she continued to reside outside the states.
