Senator Pat Harrison says there are two outstanding things that the present administration ought to have credit for—tree siting and endurance contests.

If the weather man would divide the showers with the south part of the state it would no doubt be appreciated by all the livestock. Reports are they are suffering down that way.

This is the time of year when every one who wishes to sell something should say so via the newspaper advertising route. It pays and if you test it out you will convince yourself.

This is a good week to start your fall advertising, Mr. Merchant. The people are in the buying mood now and its up to you to attract them to your store and sell them on quality, value and style.

There is one thing you can say for a carnival company—they don't fool around long after the show is over. By Sunday morning most of those here for last week were on their way.

Due praise to the city forces who cleaned the streets and had every thing in apple pie order almost before the early risers got out Sunday morning. It was quick work and good.

Ham Lewis is running for United States senator on the democratic ticket in Illinois. His opponents are two women who are talking him to death but at that the foxy boy with the pink whiskers is smiling and apparently taking care of himself in his own style.

Do you favor a fair next year? If you do or don't tell the heads of the organization so they will know the general attitude when they decide as to their future plans. It's a big job and a hard one and we should all make it as easy as possible for those who give their time and efforts to provide these events.

L. E. Archibald, wide-a-wake county agent, and those who assisted him in making the agricultural part of the fair the success it was, have a right to feel proud of their efforts. The Legion boys arranged for the immediate payment of all premiums and we have heard only the finest things about their

President Hoover has decided to look on and let the prohibition eat jump without pushing her, according to Arthur Brisbane, which may be alright but the chances are that if he is a candidate in 1932, and they say he is, he will have to say whether he wants her to jump one way or the other.

South Bend has a killer and until he is located the people of that good Indiana city will be duly alarmed. The slaying of an eight-year-old girl whom the fiend had attacked was followed Sunday by the death of seventeen-year-old Alice Waltman while she slept in bed with her little brother. It's a serious and frightful condition and has the police force mystified.

Senator Caraway of Arkansas, speaking before his state convention the other day said: "When Wilson was president I owned a farm; when Harding was president I had an equity in a farm; then came Coolidge and all I had left of my farm was an echo; now we have Hoover prosperity and my farm holdings consist of a memory."

Most folks have a good word for the big fair. It was a great success from the exhibitors standpoint and those who attended and were interested in that part are loud in their praises. The free exhibits and the parades, the Old Settlers day and the rest of the program was excellent and it was all together a big event. The crowds were, we believe, as large as ever seen here.

More than 5,000 bank failures, hundreds of thousands of bankruptcies, millions who have lost their homes and farms—and the Indiana senators at Linton tell the people of Indiana that the party in power has carried out every promise. The question is, just how long will the people of this country believe and follow such statesmanship?—Columbia City Post.

The Erie has placed a watchman back on Winchester street and the Nickle Plate one block farther south, thus meeting the desires of most of the people here as they said they would. The wig-wag signals meet the demands on the outside streets but those near the stations are flickering most of the time. The watchmen it should be remembered are only on the job during the day time and you will have to stop, look and listen before six A. M. and six P. M.

(U.P.)

Q. Is it permissible for one to aid the servant in removing the plates by stacking them?

A. Never.

Q. Should man use perfumed stationery or envelopes with gay linings?

A. No; the man of good taste uses plain white unruled paper and envelopes to match.

Q. What is the real test of perfect manners?

A. Never to offend the sensibilities of others.

Sewing Hint

After threading the needle, tie a knot in the end of the thread that was last broken from the spool, and the thread will not kink.

Pears are delicious when sliced and served with cream and sugar. But used in equal parts with sliced peaches they are even more delectable.

A Kodak Hint

When a kodak is carried on the auto trip, the cause of a road accident has often been proved by taking a snapshot of the accident; the side of the road on which it occurred, and the location of the car.

Fate Unkind to Most Artist-Model Unions

Statistics Prove the Show Girls Go in Heavily for Modeling—End in Marriage but Fail in Combination of Model and Wife

New York, Sept. 16—Quite a lot of romances lately have had their inception in an artist's studio. And quite a lot of them, too, have ended there. Many a story has been written around the theme of the lovely artists' model and the famous artist. The plot generally describes the romance, the marriage and then the necessity of the artist to find another model, with the result that instead of being a model union, it becomes a muddled one.

In real life, too, many famous models have married famous artists, men who have immortalized their beauty, and so brought them renown. Many of these marriages have been happy, but a great many of them have also gone on the rocks.

McClelland Barclay, famous artist, has just married lovely Helene Haskin, who was the inspiration for his "Fisher body girl." She is a society girl, who, wearying of an amorous round of teas, lunches, dinners and dances, made a place for herself in the theatre, and from that achievement took up modelling. It is interesting to recall that Barclay's first wife was also a society girl. He married her in 1916, and declared that he had done so because she had "the most beautiful legs, the trimmest ankles, and the shapeliest legs in the world." Fourteen years later, despite his fervent assertions of her beauty, he allowed her to divorce him. Barclay declared that he had never seen a model to compare to her. Just nine months later came the news of his marriage to another model, Helene Haskin.

The second wife of Ben All Haggan, millionaire, renowned artist and decorator for Ziegfeld's Follies, was Bonnie Glass, a dancer, who had modeled for the deonair Haggan. After a few years of marriage they tried a trial separation that became a permanent one in Mexico, when Bonnie received a huge settlement.

Haggan took as his third wife, lovely blonde Mary Corday, a little American art student, whom he had met in Florence, and whose features he had also immortalized on canvas. The two are inseparable companions, and very happy, according to society gossip.

Frances Starr, the actress, was one of the favorite models of Haskell Coffin, the renowned portrait painter. They were married in 1920, Coffin having been left a widower with three sons. The actress and her painter husband were radiantly happy for a time, but suddenly rumors of incompatibility and then separation were rife. Last May, Miss Starr was awarded a divorce at Reno, having charged non-support. The artist, penniless and desperate, was taken from his home to a hospital, suffering from a nervous depression, it is now restored to health. He says that he has found salvation in religion and believes that his wife will ultimately return to him.

But there is a pleasanter side to the story of artists and their "model" wives. James Montgomery Flagg, the famous illustrator married Dorothy Fitch, one of his best models. They are very happy, and Dorothy Fitch is still his favorite model, being used for many of his magazine story illustrations as well as magazine covers. And there's Howard Chandler Christy and his beautiful wife, Nancy. She, too, was his model before their marriage and she still is. They share common interests and, incidentally, Mrs. Christy is her husband's business manager, as well as critic and friend.
