YOUNG MAJOR GENERAL WILL COMMAND ARMY

New Chief of Staff Comes Of Fighting Stock

Washington, Nov. 21.—(UP)—The army's youngest major general, Douglas MacArthur, scion of fighting stock and a much decorated warrior, is expected here this week to assume his new duties as Chief of Staff, the nation's highest military post.

MacArthur comes from the Philippine Islands, where he commanded the American forces. Before that assignment, he won fame in all parts of the world as an engineering officer, as commander of the gallant "Rainbow Division" in the World War, and as superintendent of the U. S. Military Academy.

Numerous problems face the new Chief of Staff, who, incidentally, will be the youngest man to hold that job since the World War. He is 50.

Mechanizing Army

First, army officers point out, there is the problem of mechanizing the army. Experts have been at work on this job for years, but it is far from complete. The inventiveness of man, which has completely changed modes of fighting, has made it necessary for the army to revise many practices and doctrinal conceptions. Motorized artillery is replacing horse-drawn guns. Even the cavalry is being motorized, in part, by the introduction of armored cars. Much remains to be done, military men say, before the United States Army is made a thoroughly modern fighting force.

Still another problem awaiting him is the proposed redistribution of infantry forces. In the last war an infantry company was composed of 250 men. They were armed with rifles capable of firing five times without reloading. In earlier years the firing capacity of a company was based on still slower weapons. But now, with the impending perfection of automatic shoulder rifles, military experts are considering the advisability of cutting down the size of companies.

Third Problem

A third problem awaits solution: Revision of army pay to provide more equitable salaries for different ranks and to assure all soldiers the same chance of promotion.

To all of these problems MacArthur is expected to bring an eagerness of spirit and a clarity of mind which his military record shows has enabled him to reach the high post of Chief of Staff at an age when the average officer is only a colonel.

No little surprise was created when President Hoover announced his election. Yet MacArthur's selection was applauded by officers of the war department.

MacArthur, comes from a military family. His father was Lieut. Gen. Arthur MacArthur of Civil War fame. He was born on a military post, Little Rock Barracks, Ark., on January 26, 1880. After graduating from West Point in 1903, young MacArthur joined the engineers, and was sent to California and later to the Philippines. For the next few years he was engaged in river and harbor work. He first came into national prominence in 1908 when he was appointed a White House military aide.

From then until 1913 he served in various stations, but in that year was returned to Washington to serve on the General Staff.

Four years later the United States entered the World War and MacArthur, then a colonel, was sent to France. Only a few months after arriving there he was made Brigadier General and was given command of the 8th brigade of the Rainbow division, which, still later, he commanded.

Romantic Stories

MacArthur's war service has given rise to many romantic stories. One, told by a brother officer here, recounts how he avoided an imminent fight between two American divisions who came upon each other in the dark by advancing between them, disregarding bullets, and giving a warning which prevented the killing of brother soldiers.

In appearance, the new Chief of Staff is tall (six feet), slender, dark-skinned. He has brown eyes, brown hair, a prominent nose and a mobile expression.

MacArthur has always taken an interest in athletics, his associates say. At West Point he played baseball, but today he takes his exercise in long walks, during which he mulls over his problems.

While in Manila, MacArthur formed a strong friendship with Manuel Quezon, president of the Philippine senate and with other Filipinos. His experience there is expected to fit him as an advisor on Philippine problems to the secretary of war, who is responsible for the administration of the islands.

MacArthur's long and distinguished career as a soldier has brought to him many decorations, among them the Distinguished Service Cross and Distinguished Service Medal, seven silver star citations for bravery, and the following foreign decorations: Commander of the Legion of Honor (French), Italian War Cross, Commander of the Belgian Order of the Crown, Officer of Leopold (Belgian). Also, he has had conferred upon him the LL.D. degree by the Pennsylvania Military College, Maryland University, and Western Maryland College.

As Chief of Staff, MacArthur will wear the four stars of a general. His predecessor, General Charles P. Summerall, was the first to enjoy this rank, created by Congress recently, in time of peace.
