SESSION OPENS
AT NOON TODAY
IN WASHINGTON

At the far end of Pennsylvania avenue Mr. Hoover sat at his square rigged desk. The three branches of government were at work.

The senate convened promptly at 12 noon. At the hour of convening the galleries of both houses were filled and there were crowds in and around the capitol, drawn there both to witness the beginning of a session which may be historic and to see the communist demonstration against which several hundred police were massed.

Just at the hour of convening the police and communists met with a show of tear gas bombs, flying stick sticks and the firing of one shot by police.

Speaker Longworth called the house to order at 12:01 p.m.

Senator-elect McGill, Democrat, Kansas, and Senator-elect Bulkley, Dem., Ohio, were early on the floor being introduced to their colleagues to be.

Chaplain of the Senate Z. Barney Phillips prayed "May passion for the commonwealth consume all dross of unworthy ambition."

The house was unusually slow in gathering. Only a handful of members were in the chamber 15 minutes before 12.

A microphone was set upon Longworth's desk.

Longworth, appearing at the last minute, called the house to order a minute late, banged down his gavel, and as the house became silent called upon the chaplain, the Rev. James Shere Montgomery to open with prayer.

First Bill Introduced

Washington, Dec. 1.—(U.P.)—A drought relief bill sponsored by Rep. James B. Aswell, Dem., La., calling for an appropriation of $60,000,000 to be advanced to stricken farmers was among the first measures when the house convened today.

The Aswell bill, backed by the administration, is believed to be the drought measure most likely of passage. It was drawn up after consultation with relief administrators from the 21 states affected.

Introduction of the bill, leaders hope, will tend to stem the tide of more radical legislation which the drought may inspire.

The bill provides for advances to the farmers to meet their needs for seed, fertilizer or anything else necessary to rehabilitate them next spring. The funds would be loaned with the coming crop as security, a method employed successfully in previous farm loans.
