Office Romances on the Increase
And Are Eminently Successful

Following the Oratory of the Noted Educator of the Northwestern University, Femmes of the Business World Walk on Winged Heels Keeping a Watchful Eye on the Boss Whom They One Day May Wed.

Mrs. Morgan F. Larson

Mrs. Carl G. Fisher

Mrs. Bob LaFollette

Mrs. E. M. Statler

Mrs. Diana Ellis

Mrs. E. M. Statler

New York, Jan. 27—When Dr.
Edward Lyman Cornell issued his now famous exhortation, "Marry your secretary" to the student body of Northwestern University, he imagined, as did most of the listeners, that he was expounding a new idea. But he wasn't.

Marriage between secretaries and their bosses have been taking place for a long long time and—there's this to say to Dr. Cornell's theory—they turn out in most cases eminently successful.

For instance, Miss Ada Schmidt landed here from Denmark a short five years ago. For three years she worked as secretary and companion to the aged mother of Governor Morgan F. Larson, of New Jersey. Then, to the surprise of his family and friends, Governor Larson and Miss Schmidt went and got married. And happily married at that.

Old "Fightin' Bob" La Follette was another lady in the political sky who married the lady whose duty it was to record his words in black and white. After their marriage they continued to run the household and office together and everything worked out splendidly. Senator "Fightin' Bob's" son, Bob, Jr., who took hold of the reins on his father's death, also married his secretary. But his was no office romance. Young Bob met his bride, Miss Rachel Wilson, while she was still attending high school and when he took over his father's business he made her his secretary. However, the announcement of his marriage came as a complete surprise to his friends.

Still another political light, Congressman La Guardia, married the girl who helped him run his office and added him in his political campaigns. Now happily married, she still helps him in business and politics.

Others on the list include C. W.
Post, who founded the Postum Company. E. M. Statler, the late millionaire hotel-owner, married his secretary. She continued to be his chief assistant while he lived.
After his death she was appointed manager of the enormous string of Statler hotels.

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, married his secretary last year in London, England.

Of course, one must not assume from the foregoing instances that the paths of secretarial romance—as we'll call it—is always strewn with primroses. Very often it proves to be a rugged, thorny one.
A notable example of the latter was the case of Mrs. Lillian Al-water Heckscher. Heckscher's first wife, who had won her divorce from him only three weeks before he married his secretary, brought suit for $250,000 for alienation of affections against her successor.

There were few primroses on that path.

There are many angles to be considered in this secretary-boss marriage idea which Dr. Cornell has failed to take into account.
Chief among them is the problem of recreation and relaxation from business thoughts and worries.

When a man marries his secretary and she continues to help him in his business, there ceases to be any such thing as "after office" hours. The couple are in each other's company constantly—24 hours a day—and all of the time both are burdened with mutual business worries.
