SEASON'S ONLY BLIZZARD ROARS TOWARDS EAST

attributed directly to the blizzard. Of these, 12 were in Chicago, two in Milwaukee and the others in smaller communities.
For many hours, it was feared that four men aboard the fishing tug Palmer had been lost in Lake Michigan, but the tug docked last night at Chicago and Capt. Alfred Shellswick telephoned his wife at Kenosha that all members of the crew were safe and well although they had a harrowing experience battling the high waves. After a short stop here, the tug sailed for its home port, Kenosha, although the lake still was very rough.
Several of those killed stumbled blindly into the paths of automobiles. One man was killed by electricity while cleaning snow from the steps of a street car. Another fell from a roof he was cleaning. Several died of heart disease or exhaustion brought on by shoveling snow.
The temperature at no time fell much below freezing. Marooned motorists, of whom there were thousands, suffered intensely from the cold, but there were no reports of death by freezing. One reason for this was that almost all the homeless in Chicago were among those at work.
More than 10,000 cars were stalled in snowdrifts throughout Chicago, with thousands more on country highways. In many instances, cars were covered completely by the snow.
Of the 15.7 inches of snow that fell here, more than 13 inches fell between 9:45 a. m. and midnight Saturday. From here the storm moved northward to beyond Milwaukee and eastward across Lake Michigan. It had struck the preceding night in southern Illinois.
The eight-inch blanket over the southwest was reported melting today, but in Chicago the temperature dropped and the snow remained, while heavy weather still prevailed along the east coast. Rain took the place of snow in many parts of the east, the worst of the storm having spent itself before it passed through Ohio.
While the storm was a tragedy in big cities, it was greeted with enthusiasm as it was the first of the year of any severity and its benefits more than made up for the hardships it caused.

FINAL SESSION OF LEGISLATOR IS OPENED TODAY

average voter and allows the large corporations to escape their fair share."
Senator Thollie W. Druley, Democrat, Boston, moved to amend the bill, putting the highway figure back where the house had it, but his motion lost a voice vote.
Nejd spent a quarter of an hour trying to gain recognition of the chair, but finally was squelched on a voice vote upholding the ruling against him.
Senator Floyd I. Garrett, Republican, Battle Ground, moved to report the bill from committee of the whole to the senate, and it was his motion, adopted 27 to 17, that started the pyrotechnics.
If failure of the proposed budget to pass, restored that of the past two years, the state would be compelled to get along with much less than either Republicans or Democrats favor, thus probably forcing the Governor to call a special session to iron out the differences.

EARTHQUAKES GALES, SNOW DO GREAT DAMAGE

The storm followed a week-end of bitter weather in all parts of the British Isles, earthquakes in Macedonia and strange weather elsewhere. Blizzards raged throughout England and Scotland. Shipping was disrupted in the English Channel and the North Sea and lifeboats were kept busy assisting distressed vessels to shelter.
The steam trawler Lochlong was wrecked on the Fifehire coast. The crew of ten men was rescued.
The city streets were covered with snow which melted in the morning but was replaced by a heavier blanket at noon. Traffic proceeded slowly through slippery streets and the underground system was crowded with thousands of workers who sought to avoid delay in bus and tramway traffic.
The first casualty of the day was recorded at Mitcham, a suburb, where a man dropped dead at a corner known locally as "cold blows," due to its reputation for chilling winds.
In France the storms were followed by floods. The Seine was at flood stage, a height of more than 15 feet. About 3,000 inhabitants of Viry-Châtillon were isolated and awaiting rescue.
The Rhone flooded the lower quarters of Avignon and there was a heavy snowfall in the St. Mihiel region, which disrupted traffic. The Meuse flooded the Bar-Le-Duc district. At Rochefort fog tangled the shipping traffic and the fishing boat Belenite was aground.
A heavy snowfall was reported at Petit St. Bernard and a party of Alpine chamois guarding the Franco-Italian frontier was isolated. Officials expressed anxiety for their safety.

Eel's Vulnerable Spot
Eels have an organ in the tail that pulsates, and fishermen call it a second heart. It is not a real heart, but if an eel is struck in this region it has the same fatal effect as a blow over the heart.

Murder Inquiry Is Continued Today

Nashville, Ind., Mar. 9.—(UP)—The renewed investigation into circumstances surrounding the alleged murder of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Brown, near here, and destruction of their home by fire, again centered here today.
Authorities received a report Saturday afternoon that a man believed to be Paul Brown, suspected slayer of his parents, was working in Marshall, Ill. Local authorities went to Marshall and found, however, that he was not the man wanted.

Narrowly Escapes Death on Railroad

Evanston, Ill., Mar. 9.—(UP)—William Erlanson, Jr., 8 years old, was recovering today from shock and fright experienced when four playmates who said they "didn't like him," bound him securely with rope and left him on a Northwestern railroad track.
William struggled and cried for
