April 29 (U.P.)—It is a thing how carefully some select handbags because the one accessory that is the most difficult to hide. These terrible things about with the rest of the outfit can hardly sit on it. You keep it behind you in a bag or you cover it up on the edge of your coat or your gloves over it. It is seen and seen all the time, to have several handbags is really no problem. But the woman who must carry a limited income must think slowly and keenly making this purchase. One who has ever owned one will tell me that a really good bag is the best all-around thing to have. It is durable, does not affect it. It does not soil nor scratches. If they are light and bright, they are the reason for their success. It is because they can match shoes, and again all owners of shoes know what a joy they are when they keep their feet in a Java lizard is the choice of many French women because it is so light, so comfortable, even in a pinch is permissible wearing there has been some time for a dash home. Better handbags should have been made or be the type that you can use on the arm between the fingers of the hand. The elbow, is purely a matter of personal choice.

EIGHT KNOWN TO HAVE DIED: IS UNCHECKED

in all parts of North America. With them was H. L. Smith, vice president of the Sinclair company, whom Sinclair dispatched as a personal representative.
Fire fighting equipment from Longview and other East Texas points was concentrated here for the use of the Oklahoma experts. Because of the enormous quantity of gas rushing up from the earth to feed the flames, several days may be required to get control, veteran oil men said. Nitroglycerin probably will be used to blast the fire into submission.

Sabotage was included in the list of explanations for the fire.

This explanation was offered by Sinclair officials who said the fire started beneath the derrick floor where there were no moving parts. Last week Ranger Captain Frank Hamer sent circular letters to all oil companies in Oklahoma and Texas warning against a "communist plot" to destroy refineries and pipelines.
The five charred bodies were identified with difficulty. Some of the bodies were little more than skeletons. Jewelry or dental work provided the principal means of identification.
Those whose bodies had been recovered were George Albright, Carnegie, Pa.; Roy Blankenship, Seminole, Okla.; Virgil Woltz, Hunter, Okla.; W. H. McCaslin, 53, Winona, Okla.; and W. H. McCaslin, Jr., 25, Winona, Okla., his son.
The two workers whose bodies were seen through the flames were believed to be Robert Murdoch, Orlando, Okla., and William Harroun, Canadian, Okla., while the three missing men were George Barthan, George Murdoch and Frank Wolffs.

At dawn today the fire burned more fiercely than before, then lessened for a time, permitting searchers for bodies to approach a little nearer. The almost complete absence of wind was a favorable factor.
Shortly after dawn searchers were able to make their way through scorched vegetation to within 50 yards of the well.
The area was guarded by special deputies hastily appointed by Sheriff Martin Hays of Grege county. The deputies halted all automobiles 400 yards away from the well.
Hundreds of residents of Glade-water went to the scene of the fire, four miles southeast of the town.
Pat Massey, one of the well crew, had been to Dallas to visit his wife. He returned to Glade-water yesterday and went out to the well. Nearing it just as the spark touched off the oil and gas. He dragged several of his fellows to safety.
Massey pulled young Harroun away and attempted to extinguish the flames enveloping him by rolling him on the ground and throwing sand. Blinded by the fire and crazed by pain, Harroun was reported to have dashed back into the flames in the confusion.
The body of Woltz was found 100 yards from the well. It was believed that he and Murdoch, drilling partners and close friends, lost their lives attempting to help each other.
Most seriously burned of the survivors were Frank N. Flouck, Woodsfield, Ohio, and John Keys, Oklahoma City, roustabout workers.
Lee Brown, head tool pusher, escaped being seriously burned by ripping his blazing oil-soaked vest from his body.

who appealed to those present for frank and courageous consideration of present economic ills. Business, he declared, must accept the leadership which the public expects of it at this time. He opened the door for corrective proposals by saying that the Chamber of Commerce "is not afraid of new ideas."
"It seeks them, it welcomes them," he declared, adding, however, that it does not hastily adopt "patent cure-alls."
Butterworth was optimistic of an upturn in business, saying "we have reached the point when improvements are appearing in the news of the hour."
Lamont, likewise, expressed confidence in a gradual recovery.
"After such a cataclysm as we have been through, time and the slow working of economic readjustments are necessary before the world can return to economic health and vigor," he said. "And there can be no doubt that many of these necessary readjustments have been and are being made, and that business is even now sluggishly responding to the stimulus of these needed changes."
Lamont defended the administration's course during the depression.
"The truth is that I have not seen a single feasible scheme suggested by which the federal government could have done more than it has done to bring about a return to prosperous conditions," he said. "No other government has been able to do more. Nor have those governments leaning toward a socialistic policy been successful in finding a solution for present problems."

The secretary of commerce, discussing unemployment, explained that business is now about 25 to 30 per cent below normal, while there is 10 per cent unemployment.
"Is there any reason to believe that, when business has regained this 25 or 30 per cent loss and returned to normal volume, this 10 per cent of the workers will not be readily absorbed by industry?" he asked. He referred to the first report of the United States labor commissioner 50 years ago in which a dark picture was drawn of overproduction of that day, with a dire prophecy of widespread unemployment because of the machine age. Despite that prophecy, however, he said, society has continued to device new services which absorb workers.
"I am enough of an optimist," he said, "to believe that industrial history will again repeat itself and that the next 50 years will witness further displacement of labor from the older pursuits, and the further development of many new products and the new services which will afford employment to those displaced and supply the over-expanding wants of our people."
