Switzerland Takes On Fourth Language

Geneva, Sept. 9.—(U.P.)—Switzerland, which already has three official languages—French, German and Italian—has just decided to include in a fourth.

The latter, which is known as "romanche," or "romanche," is regarded as Switzerland's only native language. It is believed to have been used originally by fugitive Tuscans when they sought refuge at the time of the first Roman kings.

The language is spoken principally in the Canton of Grisons, and especially in the Engadine, although its use also is found in other portions of Switzerland.

The Canton of Geneva has just decided to create a special chair at the University of Geneva for furthering its study and use.

Mrs. Jesse Davis of Fort Wayne is visiting with her daughter, Mrs. Albert Teeple of near Decatur.

Judge Erwin also set out the amount of liability each stockholder was liable for and ruled that costs of the case also be assessed against the stockholders. One defendant who was a minor at the time the action was started was held not liable for any share.

The decision was an important one, dealing with several interesting points of law on contract. Both sides took exceptions during the hearing and it is probable that an appeal will be taken by the defendants.

Pacific. It was expected that their plane would be sighted or heard there.

Advice from Dutch Harbor that no one had reported the plane led to a feeling of uncertainty, although it was generally admitted that the aviators might have swung south of the islands, not approaching within sight or sound of any radio station.

"If we don't hear from them by noon, then we'll start worrying in earnest," said members of the local chapter of the National Aeronautical Association. By that time the City of Tacoma II will have been gone from Japan about 48 hours. It carried enough gasoline to keep it aloft for 47 to 49 hours.

Provided the plane followed a more direct route across the Pacific and did not skirt the Aleutians, lack of reports would not be considered unusual. Aviators believe Moyle and Allen could have spent 40 or more hours over open water before approaching the North American mainland in the vicinity of Prince Rupert, B. C., and that the flight from there would require only a few hours.

There also was the possibility that they deviated from their proposed route and followed the North Pacific shipping lane, which would bring them directly to Puget Sound and land them at Seattle almost before reports from nearby points could be received.

The fact that no ships reported sighting the plane did not create any apprehension. Low lying clouds might have forced the aviators to seek higher altitudes, where they would be hidden from sight.

Weather conditions along the American coast line were fair today. Scattered showers and occasional cloudiness were not regarded as serious handicaps to the fliers, as the force of the rain storms and wind had died down during the night, according to reports received by the weather bureau here.

Count Balks at Air
Duel with Machine Guns

Austrian Nobleman, British Actor, Formerly of Royal Flying Corps, in Comic-Serio "War" Over German Beauty, Fiancee of One

Maybe you thought duels were past—like the street car you just missed. Well for that matter, the particular proposed encounter on the "field of honor" that we're talking about is all over. And the reason is so modern that it gives the whole affair an unmistakable touch of comedy. It all started when Count Anton Czernin, an Austrian nobleman, is said to have stared at the striking pulchritude of Hilde Zimmerman, German beauty, and fiancee of Captain Charles L. Lincoln, English actor and former Royal Air Force officer, in a Carlsbad hotel. Capt. Lincoln, objecting to the Count's alleged rudeness took him to task to the extent of knocking him down. Czernin countered with a challenge to a duel, the Captain to pick the weapons. But when the former flier selected a duel in the air with machine guns, the Count hastily retreated and diplomatically forgot all about his challenge.

London.—Since all things have taken the route progress has pointed out, there was no legitimate reason why the ancient sport of duelling should not follow the inevitable trend. But nobody happened to think what a beautiful "field of honor" was now provided in the upper regions until a Britisher chose a machine gun-armed airplane as his weapon against an Austrian Count.

In the old and thoroughly limited days, a man challenged to a duel had small choice of tools with which to kill or thoroughly disable his opponent. Pistols or rapiers were the most popular instruments with which to acquire the required amount of "satisfaction." But in the midst of this inventive era, the means for staging really dramatic duels have been so amplified, that it's a pity there isn't more of the colorful (with blood) acairs to witness.

We can even picture clever promoters charging a fee to have throngs watch two offended gents battle for their honor with charging automobiles, rattling machine guns, poisonous gas or any other destructive innovations of modernity. Instead of eleven men trying to break each other's necks, as in football, perhaps enough interest could be drummed up in duelling to satisfy the thrill-hungry mobs with two-man combats.

But, turning from what would be sublime to something equally ridiculous, and reverting to the comic-serio case of the British actor, who was formerly a Royal Air Force officer, and the Austrian Count who challenged him to mortal combat, we find the Englishman showing signs of ingenuity in this duelling business. Given the choice of weapons, as the one challenged, Captain Charles L. Lincoln, of England, chose an encounter with airplanes, equipped with machine guns, when answering Count Anton Czernin's demand for "satisfaction."

This touch of previously unheard of modernism on the field of honor, and an aerial "field" at that, so flabbergasted the Count that he beat a hasty retreat from England where he had hurried to slap Capt. Lincoln's face, quite figuratively, with his noble glove.

The old cry of the French police, "Cherchez la femme," applies in this case, as it does in most duels. Find the woman and one finds the cause of a whole lot of things. Yes, sir, even proposed bouts on the duelling grounds of 1931.

The fracas between Captain Lincoln and Count Czernin started when the Austrian nobleman is alleged to have stared with unbecoming rudeness at the striking pulchritude of Hilde Zimmerman, German beauty, the fiancee of the Britisher, in a Carlsbad hotel. The Count is also said to have admitted addressing a note to Fraulein Zimmerman, which she passed on to Lincoln.

Enraged, the English ex-flier went to Czernin's office the next day to demand an apology. Lincoln later explained what happened in these words:

"I knocked him down twice, but he got up and ran to the door shouting, he would 'fetch a policeman.' I followed him and gave him my card. He then brought action against me."

The "action" was haling the Britisher before a police judge on a charge of assault, but the judge vindicated the former Royal Air Force officer when he said, "The British captain was compelled to act according to the unwritten laws of his country. If he had not done so, he would have been considered a coward and an honorless individual."

Thoroughly dissatisfied at every turn of events, Count Czernin followed Capt. Lincoln and his beautiful fiancee to England. Through the columns of a London newspaper, the offended nobleman challenged Lincoln to a duel. The latter's curt reply that he preferred airplanes equipped with machine guns effectively squelched whatever enthusiasm the Count had previously entertained for an encounter.

Ah, progress has scored again!

when he took his first $500 from the till.

Whether Wolf would be turned over to the state's attorney today for prosecution was problematical. He has been held a voluntary prisoner of bank investigators since confessing his speculations to a bank official.

In a formal statement that followed the monthly meeting of the board of directors yesterday, Arthur Reynolds, chairman, said the bank was protected by insurance up to $2,000,000 and that of the remaining $1,866,929.06, one block of securities had been recovered and another $500,000 block was expected soon.

"Wolf was one of the trusted employees of the bank and this is an instance of the breakdown in such a system," Reynolds' statement said.

"We are satisfied that Wolf has made a full disclosure of his transsactions. He is reconciled to his fate and must pay the penalty for his acts. He is rendering us full assistance."

Wolf, who lives in a $75 a month rented home with his wife and daughter, spent his leisure tending flowers in his garden.

"I used to try to sum up my transactions but it was hard to keep so many big figures in my head," he told investigators.

Directors of the Chicago Board of Trade yesterday ordered investigation of trading operations of David D. Weiss, a member, who admitted handling more than $1,000,000 in deals for Wolf.
