Plucky Woman Scientist Studying Shy Seminoles

Miss Frances Densmore, Authority on Indian Lore, Hopes to Win Confidence of Reticent Everglades Tribe.

MISS FRANCES DENSMORE
SEMINOLE BRIDAL COUPLE

SEMINOLE CEREMONIAL DANCE

Seeking to augment the meager data now available regarding the music, manners and customs of the Seminole Indians, Miss Frances Densmore, nationally-known authority on Indian lore, is spending the winter in the Florida everglades in hopes of winning the confidence of the tribe in which suspicion of the white man is bred in the bone. Miss Densmore, whose home is in Red Wing, Minn., is a Fellow of the American Society for the Advancement of Science. Last year she won a measure of confidence from the shy children of the everglades and succeeded in making records of a number of their tribal songs. This winter she hopes to follow up that advantage and gain admission to some of the intimate rites and ceremonies of the Seminoles. The tribe is the most unapproachable and reticent of the First Americans. Originally a part of the Creek confederacy, the Seminoles separated from it in the 18th century. In 1817 and 1818 their attack upon Georgian and Alabama settlements resulted in an invasion of their territory by General Andrew Jackson, who gave them a terrible beating. In 1835 they started the most severe Indian war by their refusal to abide by the treaty of Payne's Landing, made by their chief, Osceola. The war lasted for seven years, after which the tribe moved to Arkansas. But many of the braves would not capitulate and stuck to their everglades fastness, where their descendants are to this day.

MIAMI, Fla. (U.P.)—Seeking a record of music of the Seminole Indians and a list of their medicinal plants and healing practices, Miss Frances Densmore, national authority on Indian lore and collaborator with the Bureau of Ethnology of the Smithsonian institute, is in the Florida Everglades to spend the winter in studying the tribe which has so far managed to keep its intimate rites a mystery to the curious paleface.

The Seminoles are the irreconcilables of the Indian tribes. The very name is derived from a word in their language meaning "runaway," which is an allusion to their secession from the Creek confederacy, and they are the most unapproachable and reticent branch of the First Americans. So it can readily be seen that Miss Densmore is taking on a task of no mean proportions.

Originally a part of the Creek confederacy, the Seminoles separated from it in the 18th century and occupied the greater portion of Florida, where they lived their lives, hunting and fishing, living and dying, a nation unto themselves until the advent of the white man with his firewater.

In 1817 and 1818 their attacks upon settlements in Georgia and Alabama resulted in an expedition under General Andrew Jackson invading their territory and, after many sanguinary encounters, administering a decisive beating to the warlike braves. As a climax to the invasion General Jackson hanged two English traders, Arbuthnot and Ambrister, who were alleged to have instigated the raids with the aid of John Barlow.

After the lesson which General Jackson gave the tribe, the Seminoles pursued a harmless existence until 1835, when, by their refusal to abide by the treaty of Payne's Landing, made between their chief Osceola and the United States commissioners, they started the war that lasted until 1842. This most severe of all Indian wars cost thousands of lives and millions of dollars.

When one considers that the treaty called for the tribe's surrender of its lands and its removal to Arkansas, one can hardly lay all the blame on the Indians.

Finally, however, the tribe did make peace and were recognized as the Seminole Nation and one of the "Five Civilized Tribes," being granted autonomy upon the scale permitted the other four, Cherokee, Chickasaw, Choctaw and Creek.

But there were "die-hards" among the braves, and rather than submit to removal to a reservation at Arkansas they took to the jungle-like Everglades, where their descendants are to this day. Suspicion of the white man being hereditary, few persons have witnessed Seminole celebrations. But Miss Densmore, who spent last winter among them, has overcome some of the reticence with which they surround themselves. This year the daring woman hopes to penetrate to the "secret places" of the Indians, seldom visited by white people.

It is in Seminole music that Miss Densmore is particularly interested. They can sing, she says, and already she has recorded a number of songs peculiar to the tribe. But great patience is required in dealing with these children of the forest and a great handicap to Miss Densmore's study is the lack of an interpreter.

Paris Styles

Paris, Jan. 1—(U.P.)—What women, smart women that is have been hoping for the world over has actually come, though few, as yet, have grasped the happy fact because, like many other strokes of good luck, it has come wrapped up in several layers of adversity. The hour is here when the woman of means can dress herself, her family moderate, and moderate to scant, even her man—with real chic and not destroy budget boundaries to do it. The day of "the best for a limited few" is in the discard.

The deluxe trade here is passing. Only the greatest in Haute Couture will survive the next few months, and 1932 will find a new dressmaking world here in which there will remain a few of the supreme in the realm of creation and design, and a few excellent small dressmakers who do not pretend to the heights of the czars or the czarenas, but who profess only to reproduce accepted models and do it well.

The Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church will meet with Mrs. H. M. DeVoss, Thursday afternoon at two-thirty o'clock.

CHURCH MEMBERS HOLD WATCH SERVICE

A large number of members of the First Evangelical Church attended the New Year's Eve service which was held in the church, Thursday night.

A literary and musical program was given during the evening, following a social time spent in playing games. Mrs. W. H. Leatherman, Mrs. Amos Ketchum and Mrs. Robert Garard gave several interesting readings.

A trio composed of the Misses Helen Becker and Martha Erma Butler and Edward Martz played several selections on piccolos, and Martha Jane Linn and Madeline Spahr sang a vocal number.

The Misses Helen Becker, Martha Jane Linn and Madeline Spahr, accompanied at the piano by Miss Arline Becker, sang musical selections, and the Mesdames Eugene Runyon, Henry Adler, Thomas Cook, Esta Liddy, Alfred Hanni and William Hanna sang vocal numbers including one in German.

Refreshments were served after which a half hour devotional service was conducted and the New Year was ushered in.

The program for the service was arranged by Amos Ketchum, chairman, assisted by a committee. Mrs. Frank Butler had charge of the games for the evening, and Mrs. Fred Linn had charge of the refreshments. Rev. Sunderman had charge of the devotions.

MANY ATTEND PHI DELTA DELTA

The Phi Delta Kappa Fraternity presented their annual New Year's Eve Dance at the Country Club, Thursday night. The affair was largely attended.

Decorations of the hall were in keeping with the New Year's season, with red and green color scheme predominating. A lattice of the red and green crepe paper streamers surrounded the orchestra and decorated Christmas trees were at either side. Red oak leaves were arranged on the lights, and balloons of various hues were strung across the ceiling together with paper streamers.

Paul Weaver and his orchestra from Fort Wayne furnished music for dancing. Several special dances were given including a balloon dance, serpentine, confection, noise-makers, and midnight dance. Favors of paper hats, horns, and the
