Vanderbilt Gem Heirloom Swells Thieves' Harvest

On Heels of $350,000 Glemby Jewel Robbery Comes Disclosure of Theft of $50,000 Bracelet from Society's "Golden Girl."

GLEMBY HOME

NOEL SCAFFA

While the smartest detectives of the New York Police Department were still frantically seeking a clue to the whereabouts of the daring robbers that abstracted $350,000 worth of jewelry from the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Glemby recently, came the disclosure that a $50,000 bracelet, of emeralds and diamonds, had been filched from beneath the very fingers of Mrs. Muriel Vanderbilt Church Phelps, society's "Golden Girl." The Glemby robbery was neatly carried out, when the thieves gained admittance to the house by posing as bootleggers.
Slugging the butler, they bound Mr. and Mrs. Glemby, after which they calmly helped themselves to the pick of the lady's jewel cases.
Some of the gems stolen were once the property of the Czar of Russia and the Sultan of Turkey. The Vanderbilt robbery was more mysterious, for when, where or how the theft was committed is unknown.
Mrs. Phelps had the bauble in her handbag during a shopping tour and it suddenly vanished as completely as if it dissolved. One hope for the recovery of the stolen gems is the entrance into the Glemby case of Noel Scaffa, the mystery man, private detective, who has been successfully instrumental in recovering nearly $1,000,000 worth of stolen gems. When he acted as liaison between the thieves who stole $683,000 worth of jewels from Mrs. Jesse Woolworth Donohue, and restored the gems at a cost of $65,000, which he said he paid to a mysterious "Sam Leighton," Scaffa was indicted, charged with compounding a felony. But after a long series of postponements he was acquitted.
Police are now sitting back and awaiting another Scaffa-wrought miracle.

New York, Feb. 1.—The disclosure of the theft of the $50,000 Vanderbilt heirloom following so close ly upon the heels of the gigantic Glemby jewel robbery seems to indicate that New York is the scene of operations for the cleverest and most daring gang of jewel thieves with which the police have ever had to deal.

And the police department feels far from happy about the business; for, so far, its keenest operatives have been wandering about in a haze of ignorance, with never a clue to start them on a scent that would lead anywhere near the perpetrators of the gigantic jewel haul that netted them about $400,000.

The Glemby robbery was a masterpiece of neatness and precise plotting. The thieves went boldly to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Glemby, in one of New York's most fashionable residential districts, in broad daylight. Ringing for admittance, they informed the butler that they wished to see Mr. Glem-by in connection with a consigna-ment of anti-venereal beverages.
So frank and open were they that the butler admitted them without hesitation.

He was slugged over the head for his misguided faith in mankind.
Mrs. Glemby's boudoir was invaded. The lady was trussed up and her jewel cases rifled. Even Mr.
Glemby's bathroom was not sacred to the invaders. That, too, was raided and the gentleman of the

had vanished.
Mrs. Phelps has no recollection of any attempt being made to steal the bag or to pick it. It is as if the bracelet just dissolved.

In a case such as that, one can hardly blame the police for their inability to find a clue. After all, policemen and detectives are not expected to perform miracles.

One hope for the recovery of the Glemby and Vanderbilt loot is the entrance into the affair of Noel Scaffa, the "mystery man" private detective, who has been so amazingly successful in recovering stolen gems. Scaffa has been called to see what he can do with the Glemby case, and the owners of the stolen gems, not to mention the police, are eagerly awaiting another of the miracles for which Mr.
Scaffa is renowned. Scaffa has been successful in restoring nearly $1,000,000 worth of jewels which owners, insurance companies and police had given up for lost. When gems valued at $683,000 were stolen from Mrs. Jesse Woolworth Donohue, Scaffa retrieved them and as a consequence was indicted on a charge of compounding a felony, as he was said to have paid the thief $65,000 for his loot. However, he was acquitted.

When the visit was up, Stanley walked back to his brother's cell.
He was immediately recognized as
