Women's Orchestra Ready for Debut

Finest Aggregation of Feminine Musicians Ever Assembled to Make Its Bow at Carnegie Hall, New York's Mecca of Music.

MME. LEGINSKA REHEARSING HER ORCHESTRA

When the facile baton of Mme. Ethel Leginska waves her symphony orchestra into action at Carnegie Hall, New York, on March 10, another victory will have been chalked up for woman in her ceaseless battle with sex prejudice, and she will have demonstrated her right to vie with the lordly male in the musical field as she has done in others. To Mme. Leginska belongs the credit for this new victory. In organizing and training her orchestra she has had to overcome many difficulties, chief among which was that of holding the aggregation together. The vivacious and dynamic conductor is confident that if given a fair opportunity, women are just as competent in the musical field as men. Mme. Leginska went a long way toward proving this contention when she organized the Boston Women's Symphony Orchestra and took it on two highly successful tours, which beat most male orchestral concert tour records for numbers of engagements and large audiences. Her present aggregation of women musicians is composed of 100 girls and women. Mme. Leginska had to scour Europe and America for a French horn player and oboe player, but she got them. The woman music maestro believes that orchestral work is perfectly possible for married women, but she insists that husband and children must not take up too much of the musician's time, nor must she try to create babies and art at the same time.

New York, Mar. —Another invasion of a field of endeavor hitherto sacred to the lordly male will shortly become an accomplished fact, when, on March 10, Ethel Leginska's symphony orchestra composed entirely of women, makes its debut at the famous Carnegie Hall, New York's Mecca of musicians.

Up to the present, the greatest obstacle in the way of a successful aggregation of women musicians was the difficulty in holding the performers together. Something always cropped up to spoil the happy gathering. If it wasn't jealousy, some member of the band, piccolo player, violinist or bass fiddlist, was sure to receive a more remunerative offer that caused her desertion from the band.

But Mme. Leginska has already demonstrated her ability to hold women together, and what she has done once the vivacious lady is confident she can repeat with interest. This dynamic woman is very insistent upon the fact that women are every bit as competent as men in the musical field, but so far have not been given a fair opportunity to demonstrate their ability.

Mme. Leginska went a long way towards proving this contention when she organized the Boston Women's Symphony Orchestra and took it on two highly successful tours which beat most male orchestral concert tour records for numbers of engagements and large audiences.

It was her success in that venture that led Mme. Leginska to form the orchestra with which she is now engaged, the largest she ever handled and the first one in New York.

The orchestra is composed of 100 girls and women, most of whom are still in their teens, making up in enthusiasm what they lack in experience.

One of her big difficulties was to find a woman to play the French horn. Mme. Leginska scoured America and Europe and could find only six women who are expert in the playing of that instrument. It was necessary also to import an oboe player and a bassoon player from Boston. But now her aggregation is complete and the only task confronting the organizer is that of holding it together.

This is no easy task, as Mme. Leginska points out. The women are entirely dependent on their earnings, and if they get offers that give them more financial security than they can hope for with Mme. Leginska's orchestra they cannot be blamed for accepting. But if the women's symphony aggregations were given the same financial backing as most male orchestras, so that the performers would be sure of their earnings, the development of a superior women's orchestra would be a simple matter.

Mme. Leginska points to herself as an example of a normal woman. She has been married, and has presented a healthy child to the world, but now she is entirely wrapped up in her music, composing, conducting and playing the piano.

WHAT IS HOME

WITHOUT A GARDEN?

Flowering Shrubs Are Beautiful in Garden

Flowering shrubs play an important part in the garden. Many of them are conspicuously beautiful when in blossom, and fit into planned effects in combination with flowers while before and after their flowering season they serve as a green background, against which the annual and perennial flowering plants are displayed.

Such shrubs should be selected and placed in relation to other plants in the garden with as much care as needs to be used in placing a group of perennials for their conspicuous appearance may easily spoil a picture into which they do not fit. In general they should not be used in the public areas of home grounds except sparingly and with careful consideration of their effect. Indiscriminate planting of such shrubs as bridal wreath, hydrangeas, etc., in front yards is commonplace. It prevents the working out of a dignified and harmonious planting, and belittles the importance of the flowering shrubs which are individually beautiful and deserve to be placed where their beauty will be properly set off.

There are shrubs which produce exquisite flowers, too beautiful to be placed anywhere except in the foreground where all may admire them which in flower. Bechtel's flowering crab is one of the best, or double flower plum, is another. The new Frezillias are of this nature and one fortunate enough to possess them should make the most of them.

Several beautiful new varieties of the old-fashioned syringa, philadelphus, have been developed by the French house of Lemot. Bouquet Blanche, Virginal and White Lady are among the best. All have white flowers, larger than the old-fashioned type, and in some cases most fragrant.

The old-fashioned rugosa rose are being supplemented by several improved types. These roses are very hardy. They grow into bushes, with dark green, glaucous leaves, and belong in the shrubbery border in locations where the flowers will be effective.

Rose F. J. Grootendorst is a hybrid produced by crossing the rugosa and baby rambler roses. It produces double red flowers in summer. Rosa Hugonis grows a huge bush covered in May with single yellow flowers.
