Horse Knew the Signals

Cleveland has a horse that went thru town without a driver and didn't break a traffic ordinance. He stopped for the red lights and went ahead when the green came on, and kept to his own side of the street. And once upon a time Portland, Ore., had a Collier dog that waited for the traffic cop's signal before attempting to cross busy streets. Hamans should make better drivers than they do, should kill fewer people.

California Rushes Plans To Receive Huge Akron

Sunnyvale, Cal., Mar. 8.—(U.P.)—Preparations to welcome the Akron, largest airship in the world, when she arrives here in March, are being rushed.

The mooring mast, 70 feet high, which will anchor the huge ship while she is here, was recently completed and construction of her hangar began.

The hangar will cover nearly eight acres. According to plans, it will be 1133 feet long, 308 feet wide, and 180 feet high—as tall as a 16-story office building. It is to be completed early in 1933.

The present mooring mast, which is planned, will be replaced later with a telescoping mast 150 feet high.

A force of 200 United States marines went into camp March 1 to provide the ground force which will "work" the huge gas bag into position when she drops from the skies.

Quarters for officers, enlisted men, and other personnel are to be built later.

Safe Way to Poison Rats

For a nickel (stamps not accepted) Uncle Sam's Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C., will send you a safe way to destroy rats that does the business. It is red-squill powder. This is exceedingly poisonous to rats and mice but relatively harmless to human beings and domestic animals. The "prickly" taste of the powder is objectionable to all animals except rats and mice. If another animal eats it, which seldom happens, the poison induces vomiting and that prevents harm. Directions are contained in Leaflet No. 65, 1931, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Good way to invest a nickel you are troubled with rats or mice.

Baby Lindy Abduction Recalls Others

Charlie Ross Case Most Noted of America's Kidnaping Mysteries. Children From All Walks of Life Victims of "Lowest Criminal."

Disdained even by the underworld, the kidnaper, properly termed the "lowest criminal," has sought his victims in all spheres of life. Many of the principals of America's all too frequent cases of child abduction have been stolen from humble homes. Such were Billy Gaffney, 5, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who disappeared in 1927, and Grace Budd, of New York, 11, when she vanished a year later. No trace of either has yet been found. The mystery of the disappearance of Jimmy Glass, 4-year-old Jersey City, N. J., youngster in 1915, has never been solved, although a skeleton identified as his was discovered in Pennsylvania eight years later. Baby Lloyd Keet, stolen for ransom from his wealthy parents in Springfield, Mo., was murdered by his abductors while his father was en route to pay the money they demanded. America's most noted case was the Charlie Ross kidnaping in 1874. The youngster was stolen from his home in Germantown, Pa., and no trace of him was ever found. An abduction with a happier ending was that of 15-year-old Edward A. Cudahy, heir to the packing fortune. He was returned to his home in Omaha after a ransom of $25,000 had been paid. Pat Crowe, ex-convict, was arrested for the crime, but acquitted. He later admitted his guilt.

NEW YORK, March 7.—For sheer audacity there is nothing in the long history of kidnaping that parallels the Lindbergh abduction. To find a case that even approaches it one must go back almost 60 years. It was a sunny July day in 1874 that another little boy, named Charlie Ross, was stolen from his home in Germantown, Pa.

Charlie and his brother, Walter, were playing in front of their house when two men in a wagon asked them if they would like some candy and firecrackers. The boys nodded eagerly and were taken by the strangers to a nearby store, where Walter was given a quarter and told to buy what he wanted.

When Walter came out the strangers were gone. They had taken Charlie with them. He was never seen again, although a search as extensive as the one for the Lindbergh baby was instituted and presented.

The frantic father of the boy devoted his life and fortune to the search for his "chubby" checked youngster. There were hundreds of clues. None of them led anywhere, although six months after four-year-old Charlie Ross vanished like one whom the earth had swallowed a dying man whispered the best, yet most baffling, clue discovered during the long search. The man was Joseph Douglas, who had been shot while attempting a robbery in Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, with William Mosher, a notorious criminal. "He can tell you where you can find the missing Charlie Ross," murmured Douglas, indicating his pal who lay, also wounded, a few feet away.

But Mosher died, taking his terrible secret with him, before they could question him. Douglas also died before any more information could be got from him. Every corner of the United States was searched and the investigators even traveled overseas, but not a trace of sunny-faced little Charlie Ross ever rewarded them.

From time to time, men have appeared and declared they were the vanished youngster, now grown up. But none could substantiate his claims to surviving members of the Germantown family.

A case that attracted international attention was the kidnaping of Edward A. Cudahy, fifteen-year-old heir to a $40,000,000 packer's fortune. The boy was abducted from his Omaha, Neb., home in 1906 and returned to his

He was careful to bring out that he did not mean they should preach politics, but that he meant they "should work into their sermon a story dealing with present day things—something people will understand more readily and so be interested in."

Jenkins said he believed the present "Faithfuls—those who can be counted on attending each Sunday"—would show a new interest and go out with "a greater zeal in bringing their friends and new members to the church."

"Preaching, like any other work, must have the undivided attention of the pastor—he must live the life he expects others to lead and be thoroughly sold on the idea of Christianity."

Now the Light Bill Is Less.
The clerks in a California drug store are so forgetful about turning off the basement lights that the boss has taken measures. He had a false board, upheld by a spring, placed across the tread of parents after $25,000 ransom had been paid. Pat Crowe, ex-convict, was arrested and acquitted, although he later admitted his guilt.

The mystery of the disappearance in 1915 of four-year-old Jimmy Glass of Jersey City has never been solved although a skeleton, identified as his, was found in Pennsylvania eight years later. Another baby victim of kidnappers was fourteen-month-old Lloyd Keet, who was stolen from his wealthy parents in Springfield, Mo., in 1917. The child's body was found in a well. Six men and a woman were convicted of the crime and are now serving thirty-five year sentences.

Comparatively recent mysteries are the disappearances of Grace Budd and Billy Gaffney, children of humble New York families. Little Billy was five when he vanished in 1927 and Grace, eleven, when she walked off with an unknown man a year later. Police held both kidnappers as unfeeling cases but little hope is held by the families for the return of their loved ones.

Little wonder that many legislators advocate making kidnaping a capital crime!

the top step of the stairs. Anyone going down, steps on this board and a string attached to it pulls a switch that turns on the lights. In the same way a person going up stairs automatically turns off the lights. . . . A similar device was used by a country merchant to keep loafers from sitting on his counters. A string pulled at his desk, released a spring-driven needle into the anatomy of the sinner. It worked fine, but it also hurt business.

Negro Blames Theft of Coal on Dice Roll

RENO, Nev., Mar. 8.—(U.P.)—The appearance of a ten when he prayed for a seven was the unique defense presented here by Harry Wright, a negro, charged with stealing coal.
If the dice had rolled sevens and not tens, Wright told the judge, he could have gotten coal.
The judge gave Wright ten days.

FINAL BANQUET PLANS WILL BE MADE THURSDAY

Their intentions of attending. The final ticket sale drive in Adams county, where to date only 60 tickets have been sold, started this morning. The committee asked that the fact be stressed that both men and women are invited to attend the affair.

A final arrangement meeting, to which all Democrats of the county are invited to attend will be held Thursday night at 7:45 o'clock at Democrat headquarters over the Daily Democrat office. All members of committees, precinct committeemen of the county and others interested in the approaching meeting are cordially invited to attend.

J. L. Ehler, chairman of the ticket committee, predicted today that by Thursday night more than 650 tickets would be sold for the meeting. All Adams county Democrats desiring tickets are urged to secure them at once.
