"East" and "West"
"Never the twain shall meet" is a phrase borrowed from the poem "The Ballad of East and West," by Rudyard Kipling. The full significance of the expression can be gained only by reading the entire poem. Isolated from the text the lines are interpreted as meaning "that people of the eastern civilization, such as the Chinese and the Japanese, and those of the western civilization, such as the English and the American, cannot affiliate upon a truly friendly basis."

Oysters should not be eaten during their spawning months, but should be protected in this period. It is merely a coincidence that these months in the year do not coincide with the letter "O." Oysters, however, are not unwholesome during these months. If eaten fresh from unpolluted waters.

Arboretum Cemetery Mansion

The mansion in Arlington cemetery has been restored to the condition in which it was when a private residence. A great deal of the original furniture could not be secured, since it had come from Mount Vernon and had been returned, but period furniture has been used. It is a handsome example of a plantation home before the Civil war.

"EMBERS OF LOVE"

By HAZEL LIVINGSTON

COPYRIGHT 1931 BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

SYNOPSIS

Lily Lou Lansing, young and pretty telephone operator, gives up her opportunity for an operatic career to marry wealthy Ken Sargent. Ken's parents had hoped their son would marry the socially prominent Peggy Sage and threaten to have the marriage annulled. However, the young couple go house-keeping and are ideally happy. Then Ken loses his position and, one night, Lily Lou hears him sobbing. Next day, Ken's father calls and informs Lily Lou her marriage has been annulled. Feeling Ken no longer cares, Lily Lou accepts a railroad ticket and $500 from Mr. Sargent and goes to New York. She rents a furnished room and through Maxine Reichen, one of the boarders, secures a position playing the piano for a dancing teacher. Later, she and Maxine go to live with the wealthy Mrs. Paula Manchester, whose hobby is befriending young artists. Peggy Sage and Lily Lou is depressed. Shortly after, Lily Lou is stunned with the realization she is to become a mother. She longs for Ken, thinking how proud he would have been, but refrains from writing him. She loses her position but Dwight Gwin, the noted vocal instructor, employs her as his accompanist and promises to give her singing lessons. At times, Lily Lou is happy envisioning a successful career but there are also hours of anguish when she thinks of her baby and feels so lonely without Ken. One day, Nita Nahman, the popular opera singer and Lily Lou's idol, calls on Gwin. After hearing Lily Lou sing, she offers to take her to Europe. Lily Lou is in seventh heaven.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SIX

Mrs. Manchester was delighted. "Madame Nahman! Really!" "Manchester gets a second-hand kick out of everything we do," Maxine said. Maxine did not show much surprise at the news, but nothing surprised Maxine very much. She made a great fuss about Lily Lou's good luck, and dragged all her clothes out of the closet to help her pack, then remembered an engagement, and went off in the midst of it. Nobody really cared very much what happened to you, here in New York.

Not even Gwin. He was delighted in a way, but in another way he didn't seem to care. The same with Madame Nahman. Offer you the other bed in her de luxe stateroom on the ship, promise to tutor you in Paris, and then seem to forget all about you.

Lily Lou flew to get her passport, her visas, to buy the little extra things one always needs, to draw out the $150 left in the bank. She was going to Europe with Nita Nahman. She, Lily Lou Lansing from Woodlake. . . . She hurried with her packing, her last minute ironing. She wanted time to write a long letter to May.

A little smile trembled at the corner of her mouth as she wrote. A sly little smile of triumph. . . . May knew a girl who had a friend who worked on a newspaper. May would tell her friend, and the friend would tell her friend, and it would be in the paper, probably with that picture she had taken the year she was eighteen. She had changed a lot since then, but Ken would remember her more like that, so it was just as well. . . .

She couldn't help wanting Ken to know. There wasn't any harm in that. Not even Peggy Sage could object to that. . . . to his reading about her in a paper. . . . She went to her bureau and took out the four newspaper clippings she had hidden under her handkerchiefs.

The Sargent Steamship Line and the Sage Navigation company had merged.

Kentfield Carey Sargent, Third, en route for South America.

Kentfield Carey Sargent, Third, general freight agent of the Sargent Navigation Company, on board the yacht Seaforth, to race next summer in the Pacific coast annuals. . . .

Miss Peggy Alexander Sage, whose engagement to Kentfield Sargent, Third. . . .

Lily Lou rolled up the clippings, stuck them in a corner of her trunk.

Her conscience, the miserable Woodlake conscience, began to torture her. How could she go to Europe, with Madame Nahman not knowing that in April. . . .

She tried to remember Dwight Gwin's exact words. "None of her darn business! Don't you mention it to her. Trump up some excuse to see friends or something, and slip off to the American hospital at Neuilly. Nita's broadminded. Keep your mouth shut and don't spread it until you have to!"

It had been the first thing she thought of. "I can't go!" she had cried to Gwin two minutes after he had assured her that Madame Nahman was serious about taking her.

She had let him convince her, because she wanted to be convinced. She couldn't give it up. Think of it. . . . the chance to get away from New York, away from all the prying eyes. . . . It would be easy to slip away later, plead ill health perhaps, go to that hospital in Neuilly. . . . Nahman need never really know. She'd have enough money—$150 left of Ken's father's money, and over a hundred in currency, saved from her salary from Gwin, and a twenty dollar money order, her mother had sent her for her birthday, and American money goes so far in Europe now. Besides, Nahman said that she wouldn't need money—none at all—

Yes, and that was just it. How could she let Nahman pay all her expenses, and not tell her the truth? She'd never take her if she knew. Might as well give it up right now.

But how could she back out of it now, with Maxine already counting on bringing Frances over to take her place? People always are so disgusted with you when you say you're going somewhere, and then you don't. . . .

Lily Lou walked up and down the small green and white room, stepping over little heaps of shoes and boxes and tissue paper on the floor. She put her old lace dress in the trunk, and saw her mother making it, holding the needle and material too close to her tired eyes. . . .

The Woodlake conscience triumphed. She wasn't ashamed of having a baby, she had been married, by a minister. . . . But to cheat Madame Nahman. . . . No, she couldn't do that.

She put on her hat and coat and called a taxi, glorying in her courage and extravagance.

She drove up to the hotel in great style, and sailed, head high, eyes bright, to the desk.

Madame Nahman was out. Back home. A sleepless night.

In the morning she went early to the hotel. Madame Nahman was resting.

"I'll wait," she said.

She sat alone in the lobby, surrounded by empty chairs, and a general air of waiting. A green uniformed porter languidly dusted tables, straightened chairs. Two bellhops drowsed on a bench.

At ten Madame Nahman answered the telephone herself.

Lily Lou went up, Madame was in bed, eating heartily of Lam and eggs.

NEW GAS WELLS AID DEPRESSION

Geneva, N. Y.—(U.P.)—Discovery of huge natural gas fields, the exact extent of which still is unknown, has set Finger Lakes residents dreaming of a gigantic new industry.

Gas production in counties to the south of here already has drawn the sting from the business depression in that section. Wells in one county alone produce 100,000,000 cubic feet of gas a day.

But the Finger Lakes region, of which Geneva is the center, has one advantage over neighboring fields. All producing wells so far drilled in this vicinity have been in sandy soil. Most of them have "come in" with terrific force.

Oil companies and stock promotion concerns have placed nearly half the farms in central New York under lease.

"I'll send for some breakfast for you. . . . a cup of coffee, some brioche!"

Lily Lou was too shy. She said she had had breakfast. Then she sat and watched Madame Nahman eat. It took a long while to gather courage to say what she had come to say. Madame Nahman didn't understand at first. She sat straight up in bed, her blue eyes wide, her long, reddish hair dragging her shoulders.

Lily Lou tried again. This time there was no possible misunderstanding. Madame Nahman drained her coffee cup, put it down on the tray and stared at Lily Lou for a long minute. Then she fell back on her pillow and screamed with choking, gurgling laughter.

She laughed until she cried, and Lily Lou had difficulty in not crying, too.

"Oh!" she choked, "if that isn't the—the most—"

When she quieted a little, Lily Lou rose to go. She was pale, and very calm.

"I thought you'd feel that way," she said. "It was nice of you to ask me to go, Madame Nahman. I'm only sorry that it wasn't possible."

Under the bright blue gaze of the hennaed prima donna she could hardly continue. She spread her hands, in a hopeless gesture.

"You have changed your mind, you won't come with me?" "Oh, no—I mean yes, of course I'd go, but how could I let you take me, when—when—"

Madame Nahman went off into another fit of laughter. She seemed to be considering some private, priceless joke of her own. "Life! So complicated. . . . But never mind, you can have all the babies you want. Have twins!" Another gale of laughter. "We sail tonight, just the same, only you will be seasick, my poor little girl. But never mind. That is life."

"I was married!" Lily Lou cried desperately. "I married a boy who was not quite twenty-one, and his parents had it annulled. So I left, and came to New York—"

"Ah, yes. To the big city—"

"No, not on that account. His father—"

"His father is backing you? He has money?" The prima donna's blue eyes had narrowed.

This was no time to hedge. Lily Lou sensed that. "He is a wealthy man," she said, "and he gave me my train ticket east and five hundred dollars. I have $150 of it left. But I hope to send it all back to him as soon as I am earning a little more. I don't know whether you'd say that was backing me or not. . . . is it?"

"No. But the child. They will provide for it? You have a settlement? Or will they take it?"

"No! Oh, no. They don't know about it. I didn't tell them. I have enough money—I can manage. I'll go to some little place for a while in France—that is, if you'll take me—and then to the American hospital at Neuilly, and you won't be bothered—really!"

"But you can't do that. You must write—or wire immediately. A marriage can't be annulled when—"

Madame Nahman thrust one fat pink silk leg out of bed. Lily Lou had a vision of her wiring the Sargents, of old Mr. Sargent getting the news, and Ken and Peggy clinging together, cowering away from it.

"No, I can't tell them now. It's too late. He's engaged to be married again. Maybe he's married—for all I know—"
