Get Ill-Fated Room

Indianapolis Jan. 8—Room 444 in the Clapp Hotel, fatal room in which Mayor George R. Dale of Muncie and other Delaware county Democrats were alleged to have converted into a bar at the Democratic convention two years ago, is the headquarters of another Delaware county contingent today.

The Delaware county republican group made the same room its headquarters.

County chairman, Ira Wilson, of Muncie, seemed a bit embarrassed when the hotel clerk informed him that the Muncie folks would occupy the same chamber.

come down from the lake with the children. They would have loved the fairy opera.

She thrilled to see her little boy's sparkling eyes, as he stood in her dressing room and admired her in her gown of frost and stardust.

"You look just like a fairy princess," he told her, seriously.

"A rather made-up princess," she told him, laughing at her reflection in the brightly illumined mirrors.

But she did look like a child's dream of fairyland, with the glorious glittering head-dress, the filmy white of the gown, her black hair in long curls, like a doll's, cascading down her back.

After the performance Marie brought Robin back to the dressing room. He was scarlet with excitement.

"Mother, I wish you would be the Sleeping Beauty some time. I would like to see you be the Sleeping Beauty. Don't they have an opera of that? Then I wish to see one with cowboys, like Auntie Vera's opera, mother, can't we have one like that, please?"

He was talking about Vera Votipaka, and her role of Girl of the Golden West, with which he had been most impressed.

"Some day, we'll see, darling!" She knelt beside him, still in grease paint and glittering draperies, holding his little hands.

George Farmers, the publicity manager, tapped at her door.

"There's an old fellow who's determined to get in to see you, Madame Lansing. Says his name is Lansing, and he's a distant relative. Do you want to see him?"

Lily Lou's heart bounded. Stopped beating for a second. Dad! Her own father—it must be!

It was. He followed close at the publicity manager's heels, a little shy, but not too much impressed with all the show, the unfamiliar surroundings, the little group of admirers who waited outside.

"Dad!" she hugged him, laughing and crying, a little hysterical at the thought of having him here, in the city, at her performance.

She scanned his weatherbeaten face anxiously. He hadn't changed much. He seemed a little younger, a little happier, a little more like home in 1919 to a nation's wild applause. Gone now were the trim uniforms, the spirited cadence, the flaming enthusiasm of 1919.

Blue denim, worn khaki and frayed nondescript clothes were the uniforms of this new army which moved slowly down Pennsylvania Avenue in a sombre column of fairs.

Police estimated 100,000 spectators lined the avenue. There was no tumultuous cheering.

Police were mobilized in full force, but had not the slightest disorder to contend with.

No officials greeted the demonstrating veterans. The reviewing stand was empty save of their own leaders. Shunted from an original route that would have led them past the White House, they could only glimpse its outline through the trees as they formed at the foot of the towering Washington monument.

President Hoover, within, was preparing for dinner. He has never publicly expressed any interest in the veterans.

From the monument the silent column swung up past the drab old treasury building and then into Pennsylvania avenue, the avenue of presidents. There they passed the new commerce department building, with its great bronze doors costing $10,000 each, and the excavations for the government's new $50,000,000 building project.

Leaders of the army reviewed it just before it disbanded at the foot of the capitol grounds. They saw and religiously saluted the cheap cotton flag carried at the head of each contingent. Only one silk banner flew in the twilight breeze. It belonged to a Pennsylvania outfit. But there were medals galore. More than a score of the marchers wore distinguished service crosses or congressional medals of honor.

In the front rank of the procession marched Joe Reynolds of

are just beginning to think about getting in their beans. The crop in which we take a great interest with the weather should be the warmest, most loved, and grained patch in the garden.

When the frost danger is past will make little difference as string bean is the most obliging vegetable and will even produce a fair crop in positions much shaded than some other vegetables will tolerate.

The choice of varieties is fine all whether you want to grow beans or wax beans. Both their advocates as to superior flavor. Then you may choose whether you want a round pod or a flat podded bean. Some of the round pods are more than the flat pods although the seems no sound basis for the choice.

There are numerous varieties from which to choose almost any sort offered by a reliable seed house will give excellent results. The stringless green is offered by all, a standard variety strains having been developed from the original variety.

String beans are now in bearing in the southern states and in process of planting farther north and waiting to be planted in the gardens of the northern states. The string bean strings its way from south to north and back so that we have fresh string beans in the market every day in the year. It is a universally liked vegetable.

String beans should not be planted until the ground is warm. They are very tender to frost or to cold cutting winds in their younger stages. Gardens with light, warm, sandy soil can get an earlier bean start than those with heavy colder soil.
