MACDONALD-FRANZ NUPTIALS ARE TODAY

Miss Agnes E. Franz, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Ernest Franz of Berne became the bride of Charles R. MacDonald, of Elgin, Illinois at a pretty wedding ceremony performed at the home of the bride's parents on West Main street, Berne at three o'clock this afternoon.

Preceding the ceremony Mrs. W. A. Howe, sister of the bride, sang "O, Promise Me," and Miss Ernestine Franz played the Mendelssohn's Wedding March as the processional. The bride was given in marriage by her father.

The ceremony was performed in the living room before an altar of ferns and garden flowers. The single ring service was conducted by Rev. F. D. Whitesell of Chicago, a brother-in-law of the bride.

Miss Flora E. Franz, a sister of the bride, and J. Thomas Morse of Chicago attended the couple.

The bride wore an ivory satin gown, trimmed with lace, and accessories to match. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses and orange blossoms. The groom wore black.

The bride is a graduate of the Berne high school with the class of 1921, and received her A. B. degree from Bluffton college at Bluffton, Ohio. For five years she was instructor of French and music at the Byron, Illinois high school.

The groom is a son of Mrs. Charles W. MacDonald of Des Moines, Iowa and is a senior in the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary at Chicago. At present he is pastor of the Emmanuel Baptist church at Elgin, Ill.

Mr. and Mrs. MacDonald left for a two week's wedding trip through out the west, and after June 24 will be at home in Elgin, Ill.

EMBERS OF LOVE
 By HAZEL LIVINGSTON
 CHAPTER FIFTY-FOUR

Ken moved toward him slowly, his dark eyes, studying the head who didn't look like anyone he had ever seen before.

"You've changed," she said finally.

"So have you."

"I'm older. I've done what I started out to do."

"I always knew you would. I was never surprised when your name flared in the headlines, and I read about you in magazines and things. It was fate."

"Fate! It was hard work! Oh, Ken, it's been hard. You don't know. I couldn't tell you. Besides . . . what does it matter. It's all over. Sit down—tell me about yourself."

"Not much to tell. It's you who—"

"Who made the front page? No—I saw your name in the papers often enough. I saved the clippings—"

"Nothing to my credit," he said. "Oh! Some would think so. But tell me. If you did read about me, didn't you think I might have liked to hear from you? A word of congratulation—a line—something? That was hard to take, Ken—"

She had not meant to say that. It slipped out.

"Hard to take! After you left me flat!"

"I'm flattered that you think I did. All these years I've had to live down the hurt of having been left—"

The look in his eyes stopped her. She was suddenly too tired, too spent after the performance, the emotion of meeting him, her father, everything, to go on.

"It doesn't matter." She walked over to the dressing room, dabbed at her brimming eyes. Remembered that she was still in make-up, and any minute Marie would be back with Robin . . . with Robin . . .

"You may as well know that I have a little boy—five years old." He stared at her.

"You mean that you, that you have—"

"Yes. You and I. I called him Robin."

He was silent for so long that she couldn't bear it. He shouldn't take it that way. What right had he to look at her as if she had robbed him, when it was all his fault, when he had left her alone, to work and fight—

"You had no right to keep that from me!"

"But you—but I—"

She was too tired. She couldn't tell him. "Ken, don't you see that I—that I couldn't—"

"Lily Lou—darling—"

He lifted her in his arms, rocked her as she used to rock the Buben, crooning over her, whispering the foolish endearments of long ago. And she wept, and clung to him, and wanted to talk, to explain, to ask questions . . . but she was too tired . . . and anyway, what was the use, when they were together again?

"I waited for hours, sir," Marie told Tony. "I had Robin in bed, and the child was asleep, but they woke him up. I don't like to have him wake up. He's a high-strung child. He hadn't ought to be woken up like that, and get all excited. Madame Lansing hadn't ought to stay up all hours like that after a performance, either. She'll lose her voice, she will. She's frail. I don't like it."

Tony took his hat. "I won't wait to see her," he said. "Just give her my love and tell her she's magnificent in everything she does—even the foolish things. That is, if she asks for me. She may not think of it."

DO YOU INHALE?

Silence may be golden . . . but is that why other cigarette advertising is generally silent on this question?

WHEN the truth hurts—it's only natural to avoid the subject! Inhaling has long been an "untouchable" topic in cigarette advertising. And no wonder! In every tobacco leaf—even the finest, the mildest—nature hides certain impurities which, when not removed, are unkind to delicate membranes!

And since, knowingly or unknowingly, every smoker inhales some part of the smoke from his or her cigarette, Lucky Strike developed that great scientific process which removes certain impurities. Luckies created that process. Only Luckies have it!

Do you inhale? More than 20,000 physicians, after Luckies had been furnished them for tests, basing their opinions on their smoking experience, stated that Luckies are less irritating to the throat than other cigarettes.
