THE DEATH OF JOSEPH

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR JUNE 26

Quarterly Review

By HARLOWE R. HOYT
WALTER SCOTT

Jacob passed away at the age of 147 years. When his body had been embalmed after the custom of the Egyptians, Joseph and his brethren placed it upon a chariot and bore it in state back to the land of Canaan. There, in the cave of Machpelah, the body was laid away beside the dust of Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebekah, and Jacob's own wife, Leah. The remains of Rachel rested near Bethlehem.

With Jacob's death, the brothers of Joseph commenced to fear him once more. They were afraid that his forgiveness was only temporary, that he had withheld his anger because of their father, and now that the head of the house was dead, they would be punished. But Joseph reassured them. "Fear not—am I in the place of God?" he questioned them. "Am I your judge?" So they dwelt together in peace in Egypt.

Joseph continued in power, enjoying the respect of Pharaoh until the day of his death. He lived to be 110 years of age, and saw his great grandchildren grow to maturity. His brothers dwelt with him in peace and comfort. After their trials, prosperity had come to the family of Jacob. But Joseph cherished a desire to be buried not in Egypt but in the land of Canaan, and he exacted a promise from his race.

Joseph died before his brethren. His body was embalmed in the Egyptian fashion and he was placed in a temporary tomb. There it rested until the day when Moses led the children of Israel from their years of bondage beneath the yoke of Egypt. Then the coffin was exhumed and placed at the head of the caravan beside the Ark of the Covenant. So Joseph found his final resting place in Canaan.
