THIMBLE THEATER

Paris No Longer Regarded As World Fashion Capital
Aided by Film Publicity, Hollywood Has Toppled City of Boulevards From Lofly Pedestal and Taken Place as Style Center of the World.

The days when smartly-gowned women proudly explained their sartorial splendor with the magic formula "It's the latest thing from Paris," are gone. Today, milady looks to Hollywood for the last word in styles, for the film capital has insidiously edged the French style center from its proud pedestal and now Paris is six jumps behind the California city, which has assumed fashion dictatorship. Above are a few of Hollywood's newest creations, which compare favorably with the best ever turned out by Paris. At the left is an evening gown of pale green satin, styled with graceful draped neckline. The skirt hangs in a wide flair to floor length. The charming wearer is Margaret Perry, screen beauty. Incidentally it is to the wide publicity given fashions in the movies that has placed Hollywood on top of the style world. In center, Helen Barclay, M-G-M's actress-model actress, shows a snappy sports sweater in red, white and blue. It is of close-knit wool and the white skirt is of the same material. The chic beret is also knit. Marion Davies, glamorous star who needs no introduction, is shown at left wearing the last word in pajamas. The suit has a pronounced Spanish motif—noticeable in the bolero jacket and the Spanish print top. Jacket and trousers are of beige silk. Note the mannish cut to the trousers—even to the turned-up cuff.

Hollywood, —Holding a candle to the sun is as nothing compared to the embarrassing situation which faced certain American women celebrates recently.

Among the favorites of fortune who can, in these dark days of depression, afford to commute to Paris for their clothes, these ladies of fashion were shocked to find on their return from the French capital with trunks full of the latest European creations that instead of being a jump ahead of the American mode, they were in fact, about six jumps behind.

The answer is that Hollywood has taken the lead away from Paris, as the fashion capital of the world. A star has only to wear a certain creation in an internationally-distributed picture and lo, a new vogue is born. Be it a matter of gowns, hair-dress or the shape of the eye-brows the film capital is now supreme as the mold of public taste, and though many of the old conservatives still swear by Paris, the gay city of the boulevards has lost its dictatorship over the frills and flounces of milady.

Some of the creations recently turned out by Hollywood designers and adopted by the luminaries of the movie world compare favorably with the finest ever turned out by Paris. And what's more, prices are more adaptable to this era of reduced incomes and business delinquency. Not only does the film capital shine at creating these beautiful fashions, but it also provides the rules for wearing them to the best advantage.

For instance, we are told that whereas the warm and vivid shades of red belong exclusively to the brunettes, and the blue color tones are made to order for blondes, the combination of black and white can be worn with charming effect by all types. This striking two-tone color scheme is flattering to both fair
