"MURDER of the NIGHT CLUB LADY"

THE NEW THATCHER COLT DETECTIVE MYSTERY

BY ANTHONY ABBOT

COPYRIGHT, 1931, BY COVICI-FRIEDE INC., DISTRIBUTED BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

SYNOPSIS
Lola Carewe, night club habitué, receives a death threat. New Year's Eve. Previously her dog and parrot were mysteriously killed. District Attorney Merle K. Dougherty suspects Lola of being the "brains" of the jewel thief ring that has baffled the police. Although her husband, Gaylord Gifford, died practically penniless, Lola lives in luxury. Police Commissioner Thatcher Colt places a guard in Lola's penthouse apartment, warning her that she must not be alone in a room at any time. Mrs. Carewe, Lola's mother; Chung the butler, Eunice the maid, and Vincent Rowland, an attorney, are present.

In the living room, the Commissioner finds a bag belonging to Christine Quires, Lola's guest. It evidently had been used that night, yet Lola informs Colt that Christine is at the Lion's Paw, a roadhouse, where Lola was to have joined her. Colt is surprised to find Mrs. Carewe's room in strange contrast to the surrounding wealth. Lola's own boudoir is a gaudy contradiction of the living room's elegance. Lola refuses to reveal the identity of the young man whose photograph adorns her dresser. Against orders, she enters the guest room alone. A scream follows. Rushing in, Colt finds her on the floor, unconscious. Dr. Hugh Baldwin, a friend, diagnoses the case as a heart attack. Lola dies; Colt calls it murder. Unnoticed, he takes something from the doctor's bag. Police Lieutenant Fallon reports that no one but the doctor entered the house. The elevator boy claims that Christine returned home about 12:15 a. m., before Lola and the police arrived, yet no other trace can be found of Miss Quires. Mrs. Carewe is questioned. She states she would have known it had Christine returned.

CHAPTER TWELVE
"Is Carewe your real name?" he asked suddenly.
She looked up at him in dark astonishment.
"What makes you think—"
"Now Mrs. Carewe—will you tell me?"
"Why not? My real name is Carewe. That was my maiden name."
"And you come from—"
"England. I married there. My husband was a Roumanian living in exile."
"Lola's father?"
"Yes. He deserted us in Liverpool when he was allowed to go back to his country. I have never heard from him again. I hope to heaven he fries in fire."
This last pious curse the old woman uttered with a detached calm that struck me as quite fiendish.

"Your husband's name?"
"Michael Jorga."
"So your daughter's real name is Lola Jorga?"
"No—Rosita Jorga."
"How did you come to change the name?"
"Lola went on the stage. She danced. We thought a new name would help—and someone suggested Lola Carewe."
"And where was your daughter educated?"
"I worked to send her to public schools—and private. How I worked! I worked like a man!"
With a shrug, Colt turned to details of more immediate interest.
"Now, tell me about tonight!"
"Tonight?"
"Yes—or even earlier. How did you spend this afternoon?"
"I went to see a vaudeville show at the Palace."
"And you got home—"
"Around five o'clock. Then I lay down and took a nap."
"And from then on?"
"That's not hard to remember. We all had dinner here together—"

Christine and Lola and I. Then they dressed to go on their parties. Mr. Rowland came for Lola and Mr. Guy Everett came for Christine and they went out like they always do and left me here with the servants. I listened to the radio for a while. I soon got tired of that. Then I went into my room and began reading The New Atlantis—that's my favorite book. But first I read the evening newspapers. Then I settled down to my book and forgot everything else. And first thing I knew Lola came home with a horde of policemen.

"Do you like Christine?"
"Yes—why not—but she is a nuisance. I don't mean to be unkind about Christine—but I do get tired of having her around here."
"Ever tell Lola that?"
"Oh, yes. But she seemed to want to keep her right here. I think they were planning some kind of business together."

Colt's glance at his skipping pencil seemed positively grateful. He knew that every nugget of information he unearthed was being carefully stored for future study.
"Do you consider all your servants above suspicion?" Dougherty then asked.
"We have only two. Eunice and Chung are both incompetents in my opinion. My daughter insisted on retaining them. I am sure they are harmless. There was some giggling among the girls when they found some love poems addressed to Lola and Christine."

"Written by Chung?"
"Yes—it was all passed over as a joke."
"By the way—Christine's escort this evening was Guy Everett. You mean the actor?"
"Yes."
"They left here together?"
"Yes."
"At what hour?"
"About nine-thirty. They were going to the Lion's Paw."

"Were they in good spirits when they left?"
"Absolutely."
"Do you know where Guy Everett lives?"
"Yes, at the Axton Club."

At a glance from Colt, I went to the telephone. While he went on, questioning Mrs. Carewe, I was calling the Axton Club, which was just around the corner. The operator there informed me that Mr. Guy Everett was not in. I left word to have him telephone Lola Carewe immediately he returned.

Colt was still interrogating the mother.
"Can you suggest any reason why anyone should want to kill Lola?" he asked.
"I do not believe Lola was murdered," the old woman retorted surprisingly, with a heavy sigh.

"Why not?"
"Who should wish to kill a beautiful girl like my Lola? Doctor Baldwin says she had heart trouble."

Colt made no attempt to argue, but again switched to a different tack.
"Mrs. Carewe," he asked, altering his voice to a confidential key, "how old was Lola?"

Colt put the question in the mildest and most indifferent of tones. His careless manner contained no foreboding of a coming sudden thrust, his chief weapon in examination.

"About thirty-five."
"Why did Lola quarrel with Basil?"
"This swift, jabbing thrust produced an electrifying effect upon the aged woman. Her eyes lighted up. Her mouth opened wide. Her hands clapped together. Unsteadily she rose to her feet.

"Basil!" she croaked. "What do you know about Basil?"
In truth, Colt's question had surprised me too. I had dismissed a bit into the water and remained afloat.

"I lost every bit of food and water aboard. For seven days I was literally without either—until Captain Wilson came along with his Circle Shell."

"At no time did I lose hope of rescue. I never even thought of giving up."

"If I had a plane, I'd be willing to start on the same trip tomorrow."

INDIANA AND NEW YORK ARE KEY TO MEET

New York and Indiana they can prevent Roosevelt's nomination.

All this presumes no change will be made in the two thirds rule. Should that rule be changed so that a majority would nominate, then Roosevelt will go into the convention with every reason to expect nomination on the first ballot.

The situation is reminiscent of the pre-convention situations surrounding many Democratic meetings of the past. Indiana, led by the veteran Tom Taggart, New York with Tammany Hall in the saddle, and often Illinois with George Brennan at the helm were the uncertain actors which brought sleepless nights to many a campaign manager.

The United Press survey based on figures gathered from each of the 48 states and from the territories represented in the convention, shows that Roosevelt will go into the convention with 609 votes exclusively of any in New York, Indiana or Illinois. That figure allows him 40 in Pennsylvania and only 24 of Wisconsin's 26.

To win the nomination he will need 161 more votes or a total of 770. The Missouri delegation is pledged to James A. Reed but there is strong Roosevelt sentiment in it and Roosevelt leaders feel certain that Missouri will go to their candidate as soon as a showing of strength is made. Missouri has 36 votes. Virginia, pledged to Byrd, is looked upon by Roosevelt supporters as in much the same class as Missouri. It has 24 votes.

Should those two states go to Roosevelt, then he can win with 73 of New York's 94 delegates and Indiana's 30, if he can just pick one stray from such a state as Illinois.

Approaching the problem from the standpoint of the "Stop Roosevelt" forces, the situation summarizes this way:

The anti-Roosevelt men claim 473 votes. Sound political opinion is that 337 of these—from the states named previously in this story—can be held in line with considerable firmness. The oppositions can prevent Roosevelt's nomination if it can hold its 337 in line and draw from Indiana and New York a total of 48. The battle will be won.

The figure of 337 as the basic "stop Roosevelt" strength is reached without including any votes against Roosevelt from Virginia, or Missouri. Roosevelt can have those states and still can be defeated 14 the basic anti-Roosevelt states hold him and Indiana and New York contribute 48 votes between them against the New York Governor, ernor.

Hence New York—and large Tammany with 35 votes in the of John F. Curry's hand—and iana with its 30 votes seem to be the pivotal states upon which future of Franklin Roosevelt depends.
