stake since he was a colt, and comes from a family of winners. Watch him go!"
The favorite is expected to get stiff competition from Clark Gable Ritchie, famed Maryland sprinter. Judged purely on their paddock appearances, Clark Gable Ritchie has it over Hopeful Frank like a blanket. The Maryland flier is far and away the best looking entry. He is getting heavy play from the women bettors.

Following is "Railbird" McLemore's morning line on the field:
Fourth race—four years, 35-year olds and upward, $75,000 added.
Entry—Hopeful Frank; probable odds, 4-5. Comment: Yes sir, this is big horse.
Entry—Clark Gable Ritchie; probable odds, 10-1. Comment: Likes wet track. May surprise.

Entry—Rowdy Boy Smith; probable odds, 50-1. Comment: Ran poor second last time out. Bad post actor.

Entry—Man O'War Reed; probable odds, 70-1. Comment: Has not raced to expectations.

Entry—Alfalfa Bill; probable odds, 70-1. Comment: Should be in the barn.

Entry—Twenty Grand Traylor; probable odds, 40-1. Comment: May spill the beans.

Entry—Loud Speaker Garner; probable odds, 40-1. Comment: Must also be considered.

Scratched—Gusto Lewis.
Field—Quiet Lad Baker, Bag and Baggage Byrd.

CROWDS PACK STADIUM LONG BEFORE START

and indications are they will be numerous.

Roosevelt forces lost ground today in one of their chief delegations, North Carolina, which decided for retaining the two-thirds rule.

The fighting for decisive votes still undetermined is going on. Every device is being used. Wavering delegates are even being taken into a private room to hear the voice of Gov. Roosevelt coming over an amplifier from Albany.

The principal business in the opening session was the keynote speech of Senator Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky.

The first test vote will come Tuesday on the fight of the Roosevelt leaders to make Senator Thomas J. Walsh of Montana permanent chairman as against Joubert Shouse.

The galleries were slow in filling and half an hour before starting time only a few seats were occupied. However, national committee ticket dispensers told the United Press the show was a "sell out."

Senator Pat Harrison, Mississippi, entered the hall wearing a palm beach suit and a worried look.

His state is for Roosevelt but he is reluctant to see the two-third rule fight made. He fears disastrous effects to the party from a bitter convention battle such as was staged in Madison Square Garden eight years ago.

Governor Murray went to a hot dog stand and had a cup of black coffee before settling down for the day's business.

In the Democratic Derby

FRANKLIN
ROOSEVELT

The leading candidate for the Democratic nomination for the Presidency. Born at Hyde Park, New York, Jan. 30, 1882. Graduated from Harvard, 1904, and Columbia University Law School, 1907. Married Anna Eleanor Roosevelt, his fifth cousin, in 1905. Assistant Secretary of the Navy 1913-20. Democratic nominee for Vice-President 1920. Elected Governor of New York 1929.

coffee before settling down for the day's business.

Gov. Albert C. Ritchie of Maryland was being solidly supported by his delegation today, despite attempted raids. Four times governor of Maryland, Ritchie stepped aside in 1928 to give Smith a clear field. This year he frankly says he would like to have the nomination. While he has scattered second choice strength his main strength is Maryland's 16 votes. His supporters denied emphatically today that there was any weakening in the delegation either as to Ritchie or as to the attempt to break down the two-thirds rule.

Shortly before noon, Commander Evangeline Booth of the Salvation Army, appeared on the platform in the black military uniform of this famous organization. She had been designated to offer the opening prayer.

Chairman John J. Raskob, of the Democratic national committee in a blue double-breasted coat, and light striped trousers, escorted Commander Booth to the speakers' stand for the benefit of photographers. He requested that no pictures be taken during the prayer, so a preliminary dress rehearsal was arranged.

This may be Chairman Raskob's last fling for the hundreds of thousands of dollars he has poured into the veins of the party to keep it robust through these last four years since the disaster of 1928.

Though maintaining technical neutrality, Raskob is Smith's man and is destined to retire after this convention.

Though he has received much abuse from some elements in the party this mild little giant of big business appeared to harbor no bitter feelings, for on the platform today he was all smiles and good humor.

At noon, the hour set for the opening of the convention, the delegates' section was filling up rapidly, but the galleries still had large areas of vacant seats.

Among those conferring on the platform was Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to the late Woodrow Wilson, throughout his public career. Tumulty, though not a delegate, exerts powerful influence in Democratic councils because of his long political experience. He is advising strong opposition to the Roosevelt attempt to break the two-thirds rule.

Tumulty says Wilson rejected similar proposals, and said he would not accept the nomination unless it came by the regular route.

Floodlights were turned on at noon, and delegates were milling throughout the floor, packing aisles and trodding each others' corns. As was usual with national conventions there was no attempt to start on the scheduled hour.

Senator Harrison, the hopeful compromiser, still was optimistic today that the fight over the two-thirds rule could be avoided.

"I think Roosevelt has two-thirds anyhow," he said, "and there is no reason for the fight."

One of Roosevelt's lieutenants, Senator Huey P. Long of Louisiana, claimed they had a majority of 81 to break the rule. Asked whose computation this was, he replied:

"It's my own—and I'm always right; when I make a count, it stands."

Bruce Kremer, of Montana, chairman of the rules committee, also told the United Press he felt confident of a majority to overthrow the old rule. He said the Roosevelt forces were going through with their plan to report a majority rule from his committee, which will meet tonight at 8 o'clock.

DELEGATES TO BE SELECTED

say that the three men probably will decide before time for the election which one will become a candidate.

Decatur has never had the honor of having a district commander. The late Rev. H. H. Fernthell was a past state chaplain in the Legion and Ferd O'Brien is a former district athletic officer and Albert Miller is athletic officer at the present time.

Busche stated recently that he would not be a candidate for the district post if a worthy Decatur man sought the office.

The 1932 state convention promises to be one of the biggest ever held in Indiana. Both major party gubernatorial candidates are members of the Indiana department. Raymond Springer, Connorsville was the first state commander of the organization and Col. Paul V. McNutt, Bloomington, is a past state and national commander.

COMMENT MADE BY W. J. BRYAN

ideas or principles, held together only by party loyalty and the desire for victory at the polls. Underlying all these criticisms is a fundamental belief that both parties have departed from their traditional principles, now lack definite political and economic philosophy and that party platforms are clear only for those things that can be said and done without shaking the party. There is much justification for such opinion and if it is wise the convention will attempt a short, concise, definite declaration of principles.

Surely the party does not need more words for its platform than the total number of words used in the Ten Commandments, the sermon on the Mount and Lincoln's Gettysburg address. These are immortal in their clearness, brevity and their comprehensiveness. No one doubts their meaning. It needs no interpretation by lawyers or hair splitting scholars to tell the average man on the far meaning of these three great declarations.

This is democracy's great opportunity to talk plain common sense to the people who are fed up and disgusted with words which obscure real issues. Two fundamental needs must be covered. The first a wholesome national economic policy which shall restore work wages and the second is retrenchment in government expenditures.

Lombardo Orchestra To Appear At Fort Wayne

The sweet melodies, unusual orchestrations, muffled brasses, slow, crooning rhythm of Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians who are being brought to Fort Wayne by the Sen Ku Che Fraternity for a dance at Riverview 29, have made that orchestra one of America's leading radio bands and they are largely responsible for the reaction from the Blues synchopation and "hot" music of a few years back.

The orchestra had its inception at a Mothers' Club meeting in London, Ontario, 11 years ago when Guy, with his violin; Carmen with his flute and Fred Kreitzer played together. They have done so ever since. Encouraged by applause and influence by the teachings of their father, musician, they enlarged the orchestra, drafting another brother, Lebert, the trumpeter, and from time to time others. All but two of the original Royal Canadians are still in the orchestra, fourth brother, Victor, saxophone, is now with the band.

They toured Canada successfully in 1925, came to the United States for a six months' engagement in vaudeville, and followed that with three years in Cleveland. From Cleveland they moved to Chicago under the management of Music Corporation of America and became a great hit at the Granada Cafe, broadcasting on WBBM and the Columbia network.

After several successful seasons at the Granada, during which time they built up a national reputation, the orchestra was lured to go to New York to open for MCA at the Hotel Roosevelt in New York City. Their engagement at the Roosevelt was a repetition of their Chicago success, and Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians became Broadway's most popular dance orchestra.
