FIGHTS FLARE
IN OLYMPICS

Los Angeles, July 26.—(U.P.)—Pro-Olympic fights which were just reaching the feverish stage today belied the lofty motives and ideals ascribed to the international games.

So far the fuses have been largely intra-national. There is, however, a smattering of international discord which is certain to flare into the open before the amateur sports extravaganza is opened by Vice-President Curtis on Saturday.

International or intra-national, the fuses, arguments, fist fights, gunplay, innuendoes and open charges today overshadowed the final preparations for renewal of the historic games.

There were no less than seven upheavals. These were:

1.—Argentina's fight for official control of its athletes.

2.—Charges that Canada's women's relay swimming team was "hand picked."

3.—The appeal of Mayor Porter of Los Angeles for funding of the games, and his charges that easterners "let down" the U. S. team.

4.—Paavo Nurmi's suspension on grounds of professionalism.

5.—A similar suspension given Jules Ladoumègne of France.

6.—Stella Walsh's last-minute decision to run for Poland instead of the United States.

7.—Disqualification of Levi Casey of the Los Angeles A. C., after he apparently had qualified for the hop, step and jump event on the U. S. team.

Most spectacular, of course, was the Argentine matter. Removal of Dr. A. C. Gaudino as president of his country's team, startling as it was, came only as an anti-climax to the fist-fighting and gun-drawing done by some of the South American athletes.

Janet Sheather of Toronto was not selected as member of her country's relay team and her mother is said to have prepared a formal Olympic committee protest charging that selections were based on personal preferences rather than athletic merit.

Mayor Porter blamed the $100,000 U. S. Olympic budget shortage on "eastern apathy," and begged for individual contributions of between $250 and $500 from "public spirited" Los Angeles citizens. Failure to raise this hundred thousand will result in America's loss of the Olympic championship, he said.

The Nurmi story is an old one and the final chapter will be known on Friday when Finland's appeal for his reinstatement will be passed upon.

Similarly, international amateur athletic federation officials are expected to rule finally on the bid of Ladoumègne, brilliant French middle distance runner, for restoration to amateur status.

Stella Walsh's case may not even be discussed. This great woman athlete decided only a few days ago that she would not accept the U. S. citizenship which she could have had by signing her name to a document. Instead, unless complications arise, she will run in the Polish track suit. (She lost her job with the New York Central railroad at Cleveland. Poland gave her a governmental position).

Most mysterious is the matter of Levi Casey of the Los Angeles Athletic club. He apparently had qualified for the hop, step and jump event on the U. S. team. But the American Olympic forces would not allow him to become a team member. Instead they chose Sol Furth of New York, whom Casey had beaten in the final trials.

No U. S. Olympic official has said why the action was taken. The switch, it was announced, was made "for reasons best known to him self," meaning Casey.

U. S. Olympic Hope

Norwood Hallowell of Harvard, whose record breaking 1500 meter run at the Olympic trials raises the hopes of Uncle Sam's representatives at the Olympic Games. Hallowell defeated a great field to win in 3:52.7 surpassing the American and Olympic records.

MINOR LEAGUES
IN REAL BATTLE

Chicago, July 26.—(U.P.)—With five leagues already disbanded and several others reduced in size, minor league baseball is gamely battling through one of its worst financial years in history.

Only 13 minor leagues remain in existence and more than half of them are struggling to finish out the year, according to a United Press poll.

The Arizona-Texas league, a class D organization with five clubs, disbanded yesterday, following the example of the eastern league, Three-I league, Cotton States league and Southeastern league.

The Western Association, Central league and Piedmont league have been reduced in size by the failure of clubs in those circuits.

The three big minors, American association, Pacific Coast league and International league, apparently are in the best financial condition of the remaining organizations but even these leagues have clubs which are having difficulty remaining intact.

T. J. Hickey, president of the American association, reported his league in good financial shape. The league recently reduced bleacher seats from 50 to 25 cents and Hickey said that bleacher attendance had more than trebled since the reduction. Columbus, Minneapolis, and Indianapolis are drawing the largest crowds, with St. Paul the smallest.

Night baseball has helped the Pacific Coast league considerably except at San Francisco, where it had to be abandoned because of the fog and chill winds. The two San Francisco clubs, the Seals and Missions, have been drawing poorly. Portland, leading the league, had been drawing crowds of 7,000 and 8,000 to night games.

Toronto and Reading are the only two clubs in the International league reported in difficulty. The league has agreed to help the Toronto club.

The Texas league, Southern association and Western league, class A circuits, all are having their troubles. Every club in the Southern association has reduced player's salaries 10 per cent except Chattanooga. Attendance was reported off about one-third in most cities despite a general reduction in ticket prices.

The Texas league has only one club, Beaumont, winner of the first half of a split season, making money. Two clubs, San Antonio and Shreveport, had their grandstands destroyed by fire, adding to their financial troubles. Two franchises have been shifted. Wichita Falls to Longview and Shreveport to Tyler. Fort Worth lost so much money the owners turned the franchise back to the league, and the team now has an unpaid manager, Clarence Kraft.

No team in the Western league was reported making money, with Omaha, St. Joseph and Pueblo in the worst shape.

The New York-Pennsylvania league, the only remaining 8-club class B league, has suffered a 14c attendance slump after a successful start when the league drew 122,000 fans in May. Charles A. Hoak gave up the Harrisburg club after a reported loss of $12,000. The Boston Braves then took over the team.

Sunday baseball which will be adopted this month by all the clubs in the Piedmont league will prove a life-saver to that circuit. Two clubs, Asheville and High Point, have dropped out of the league. Admission prices and player's salaries were trimmed to enable the league to carry on.
