New Claim to Wendel Millions
By "Son" of Secret Marriage

Scotch Claimant to Vast Fortune of New York Recluse Reveals Unsuspected Romance in Eccentric Family.

From Dundee, Scotland, comes the latest claimant to the vast estate of the late Ella Wendel, spinster recluse of New York, to spread consternation amongst the 6,000 or so other people who are engaged in a legal battle for a share of the $75,000,000 left by the last of the Wendels. The new character to monopolize the spotlight is Thomas Patrick Morris, who bases his claim to the estate on the assertion that he is the son of John Gottlieb Wendel, brother of Ella, by a secret marriage. Unlike the other claimants, Morris is armed with documentary evidence that apparently substantiates his claim. One of the exhibits introduced is a time-yellowed marriage certificate purporting to be that of John Wendel to Mary Ellen Devine, of Edinburgh, Scotland. Morris says he is a child of that marriage, accounting for the name Morris by the fact that he was brought up by foster parents in Scotland. Morris is also in possession of a book he asserts was given him by his father. The front fly leaf of this volume bears written instructions, signed "John G. Wendel," telling the story of his secret marriage and subsequent quarrel with his bride over religious differences. On the back fly leaf of the book is what is purported to be a will. This, too, is signed "John G. Wendel," and leaves the testator's entire property to Thomas Patrick Morris. If the man from Dundee can substantiate his claim, it is probable he will be named sole heir to the Wendel fortune, as he is the only claimant who comes within the third degree of blood relationship.

New York, July 30.—(U.P.)—Like a chapter out of fiction is the latest development in the great legal battle for the millions of the late Ella Wendel, New York recluse, who in life didn't have a relative, but in death has more than a Mormon elder. From Dundee, Scotland, has come the new character to monopolize the spotlight in the great drama which promises to be more sensational than any fictional parallel ever produced on the stage. He is Thomas Patrick Morris, who, to the utter consternation of the 6,000 or so other claimants to the vast estate, claims to be so-e heir to Ella Wendel's $75,000,000.

Morris, according to his story, is the son of John Gottlieb Wendel, brother of Ella, by a secret marriage, which fact, if borne out by evidence he proposes to submit, places him within the third degree of blood relation to the last of the Wendel line and makes him the legal next of kin to the late multimillionaire spinster.

Claiming that his rightful name is Thomas Patrick Wendel, the dour Scotsman from Dundee told a tale that not only sounds feasible, but he insists, is supported by documentary proof, including papers purporting to be a will, a marriage certificate and several letters.

Morris' story is that John Gottlieb Wendel married Mary Ellen Devine of Edinburgh, Scotland, at Castle Garden, N. Y., in 1876. The marriage was kept secret. Wendel fearing the opposition of his eccentric sister. Religious differences that sprang up between Wendel and his secret bride resulted in the latter leaving him and returning to her native Scotland, where Thomas Patrick, her son, was born on January 3, 1880.

tions, signed "John G. Wendel," which tells the story of his marriage and the subsequent quarrel with his bride. And on the back fly leaf there is a will, also signed "John G. Wendel," bequeathing the testator's entire property to Thomas Patrick Morris. That's Morris' story and he'll stick to it. So would all of us if sticking meant a gift of $75,000,000.

Prints for Summer Fashion's Favorite

Cool and Colorful Materials Enjoy Growing Popularity in Models for All Occasions. Will Reach Peak at Coming Olympiad.

According to Dame Fashion, the printed word is not a whit more important than the printed frock to a woman who desires to keep up with the march of mode this Summer. There are prints in all models suit every taste and they provide a colorful note in evening, walking and sports outfits. Printed frocks are having more popularity now than they had earlier in the season, and there is much to be said in their favor. Prints always look cool, besides at all times appearing feminine and dressy, especially when fashioned on the new lines laid down by the style moguls. Above are three outfits which recently made their debut on the Hollywood boulevards, winning instant popularity. At left is Helene Barclay, M-G-M actress, in a jacket of the darker tone of the printed pattern. Note the dress length. It comes to just below the calf. center, beautiful Leila Hyams, also of the screen, shows her favorite costume for the Olympic games. It is a one-piece frock of printed blue and white plaid, set off with white accessories. This outfit will be popular during the international games. At right is a lovely afternoon frock, the choice of Ruth Munn, film player. It is of black, grey and white printed chiffon, set off with a black butterfly belt bow. Accessories add charm to this ensemble, as does the veil-edged black hat.

Hollywood. — The printed word is no more important than the printed frock, according to the latest dictates of Dame Fashion. Many of the smart summer styles seen along the boulevards of the film capital feature this colorful note in evening, walking and sports outfits.

Printed fabrics are having more popularity now than they had earlier in the season and there is much to be said in favor of the mode. Prints always look cool, besides at all times appearing feminine and dressy, especially when fashioned on the new lines, drawn by the style moguls.

Smart summer skirts have gone to greater length than ever before and already there is every indication that they will be much straighter in line and possess very much less flair by the time the new fall fashions are fully established. The new dresses can clear or cover the instep, according to formal or informal requirements. They are moulded at the hips by clever insets of diagonal pieces, or by ingenious swathing of the material. The fair begins from just above the knees and comes out to a graceful fullness at the skirt hem. Some designers have tried to introduce the very tight serpent-like skirt, but their efforts did not meet with much success, the general tendency being towards the slightly flowing lines.

Most of the printed frocks have their accompanying jackets. And it behooves milady, if she would be considered modish, to pay strict attention to the selection of these jackets. Often a good effect is entirely ruined by the mismatching of frock and jacket.

There are some beautiful models of these little jackets to choose from. Taffeta, silk crepe and organdie are available in attractive styles. When the fabric of the jacket differs from that of the dress, it is always best to choose a contrasting color. But in the case of prints, it is perfectly correct for frock and jacket to be of the same color.

Taffeta goes really well with sheer cotton or organdie and volutees are an excellent accompaniment for pique and cotton lace dresses, while transparent velvet is ideal with satin, lace or silk.

One of the prettiest print frocks seen in Hollywood is of black chiffon with a small floral print in green, white and red. Wide shirtings give the waistline a wide belted look and the frock has a tiny vestee of lace, while velvet overs above the waist add to the charm of the ensemble.

Some of the sports outfits turned out in printed material are striking in their colorful smartness. Most of these ensembles pay tribute to the Olympics by featuring official colors of the games. They are carried out in snappy patterns, blue and white being most popular. These prints are usually accompanied by white accessories, such as white belt. The shoes, of course, are two-color, white predominating. There is a wide range of dresses for street wear. The popular length for the dress is slightly below the knee. They are full fashioned with neckline. Many models feature the scarf of the printed material. The street prints, too, the jackets becoming increasingly popular. Velvet or velveteen being the popular material.

The very formal of the printed frocks are fashioned in the latest, sleeveless style. The material used in this instance is crepe. One model recently featured a charming red and white print on white, with a smart around bodice, which insured a good fit on any size. The stories that went with this were black.

There are other attractive made up in warm prints that milady will find difficult to pass. There is a refreshing look about them that make them especially desirable when the temperature humidity are on the summer page.

To Tell Story of Capturing Whale

Everywhere the monster whale has been exhibited crowds have thronged to see the wonderful exhibit and it is especially interesting to children of school age, as it is a high class biological exhibition. The whale will be exhibited on a special railroad car which will be parked at the Pennsylvania depot (G. R. & L.) next Monday and Tuesday. Decatur can now rub its eyes in wonderment. And the reason—a big Pacific sea monster in the shape of the largest whale ever caught will arrive here early Monday for local onlookers to cast their world gazing eyes. Yes sir, a 68-ton mammal in all its sea going vastness will be on view here for several days to come. The monster of the sea is being transported in a special all-steel exhibition car that travels on railroad tracks. The car will arrive here early over the Pennsylvania lines and will be parked in the vicinity of the depot for local visitors to have their first look at a real whale. The tour is under the direction of the Pacific Whaling Company, of Long Beach, California, and is in charge of Captain David J. Burnett, who was head of the whaler "Hawk." Captain Barnett and his crew caught the whale, which was landed and located at Long Beach for its transcontinental tour with the ultimate destination of the tour at Atlantic City where the big sea beast will repose for the summer months on view along the famous boardwalk.
