HEART STRINGS

SINOPSIS

Life to lovely Patricia Braithwait was a series of parties, trips abroad and now—Palm Beach. Her castles crumble when her Aunt Pamela informs her that Mr. Braithwait's fortune is depleted and suggests that Pat marry the wealthy, middle-aged Harry Blaine to insure her own and her father's future, warning her that love fades. Aunt Pamela's fortune is depleted and suggests that Pat marry the wealthy, middle-aged Harry Blaine to insure her own and her father's future, warning her that love fades.

Handsome, young lawyer—beginning to pall in spite of the ardent love they had had for each other. They still cared but the routine of married life had made them "less lovers and more friends". Stunned by her aunt's revelations, Pat is seriously considering Blaine to save the father she adores, when she meets a fascinating young camper, who only reveals his first name, Jack. Despite their instant attraction for one another, Pat discourages future meetings. That night, Pam cautions Blaine to be matter-of-fact and not sentimental in trying to win Pat.

Through reading, and the inevitable drift of conversation, he was fully informed concerning all this so-called "modernism" with its rebellion and destructiveness; its flamboyant flouting of manners and morals. But it had touched him somewhat as a foreign war, in which one has no part—a regrettable fact; but out of one's province.

He thought of "modernism" in the strict sense, as a sort of bohemian class drawn from the theatre and other arts. That young people were more sophisticated than in his youth, he also knew; but of this he approved. Did not the very tenets of his doctrine of Beauty include knowledge and freedom? But freedom which included debauched conduct was a phase that had never even remotely attached itself in his mind to respectable folk. Certainly not to his friends nor their children.

His present circumstances had come about through one of nature's curious vagaries. The Braithwait plantation fronting two miles on Red River had slowly been eaten up by the ravenous stream. The mansion house situated several hundred yards from the bluff at the time of young Braithwait's marriage, had been moved back once at great cost before Patricia's birth, and was again moved shortly afterward.

The river had not changed its course. It simply rose each Spring, ate into the bluff, and sank back with the coming of summer to its original bed. In his boyhood he had sat many hours on the bluff in front of the house, dangle his feet over the swiftly flowing water. Patricia, standing on the bluff as a little girl, had looked across a waste of sandy marsh to the river a half mile away.

And to sell caving land, once the fact becomes known, is impossible. Every planter for miles on each side of him, making futile efforts to sell, had finally, in desperation and without success, tried to realize something by putting ridiculous low mortgages on their lands. They had one and all been forced to sit by and watch the river eat their substance from under them.

Pamela's father, who had an office in Wall Street, alone of all the sufferers, had sold. And he had found a buyer for Mr. Braithwait—a wealthy banker who wanted a plantation for a plaything. The man, coming down to see the place, had expressed his entire satisfaction. . . . And Mr. Braithwait had told him that the land was caving.

"Well, why haven't you bulkheaded it?" demanded the banker.

"The only bulkheads that would be of any use would be a cement wall," Mr. Braithwait replied.

"Well?"

"And that to be of use would have to extend the full length of all the caving land in this section, since a wall across the face of one or two plantations would let the water in at each end."

"I see. And that would cost several million dollars—with perhaps not more than a dozen men interested in the project. How fast is it caving?"

Mr. Braithwait told him.

"At that rate your land will all be gone in, say, twenty-five years?"

"Unless it stops. Caving sometimes stops as suddenly as it starts. A change in the course of the river, giving life to little Patricia. From that moment John Braithwait lived but for his daughter. And the very isolation of his intellectual life tended to shelter his devotion to his ideals.

His contacts with the world had been limited to occasional visits to New Orleans, New York, and other points where he had attended theatres, the opera, been entertained by wealthy and apparently circumspect friends.

Fertilizer De Luxe

Leipzig.—(U.P.)—Modern chemistry has worked a revolution in the form of fertilizers which are now greatly concentrated and changed in appearance. The newest form exhibited at the Leipzig fair is pure white, and is supplied in the form of round tablets one inch in diameter packed in paper containers. The up-to-date fertilizer is diluted by shaking up in a test tube.

American Letters Down

Paris.—(U.P.)—America wrote few
