county auditor, as the fund was overdrawn a year ago. In the budget this year, the receipts are computed at three cents instead of five cents on the $100. The balance coming to the fund in December will just about wipe out the present overdraft.

The total township rate for next year is estimated at 75 cents on the hundred dollars. The levy this year is 45 cents. The levies this year and those proposed next year follow:

	1932	1933
Township	.03	.04
Tuition	.14	.28
Special school	.22	.30
Library	.01	.01
Poor	.05	.12

* Final determination of the township tax levies will be made in September.

HOOVER'S SHIFT DISAPPOINTING

liquor traffic.

The Methodist assault on Mr. Hoover's new prohibition policy emphasized the split among prohibition organizations on the question of supporting the President for re-election. It followed by a few hours a statement by Dr. Daniel A. Poling reaffirming the decision of the allied forces for prohibition to support the President.

Poling made public excerpts of a letter in which Mr. Hoover said:

"We are on common ground in a desire to rid this civilization of the evils of the liquor traffic. We may not all agree on method as I have come to the belief that we must, through constructive and not destructive changes, revive the energies of the states to deal with the new evils, with federal constitutional guarantees against the return of the old evils."

Poling said the allied forces reserved the right to oppose the president's program in congress, but an overwhelming majority of its executive committee believed his re-election would "safeguard the gains made under the 18th amendment."

FORMER MAYOR IS CHOICE OF COMMITTEEMEN

assembly which filled the court room stood in silent meditation for one minute, being seated at the top of a gavel by Mr. Heller. The county chairman expressed the community's loss in the death of Judge Erwin.

C. H. Musselman, Berne, editor of the Berne Review and secretary of the county committee presided as secretary of the meeting. Herman F. Ehinger and Nathan Nelson acted as tellers and Grover Baumgartner, of Berne, acted as sergeant-at-arms.

A Close Contest

County Chairman Heller asked for a roll call and announced that committeemen or proxy holders should file their papers with the clerk. Proxies were checked by the clerks and the balloting proceeded. Vote was by secret ballot and Mr. Ehinger read the ballot as it was handed to him. The first five votes counted were cast for Mr. Heller. The sixth was a DeVoss vote. At 28 both candidates were tied. The result switched every few votes, was tied several times. Mr. DeVoss taking a lead on about the sixtieth ballot, holding a one vote lead on the last ballot.

Declared the Nominee

The vote was announced and County Chairman Heller declared Mr. DeVoss the duly elected nominee for judge of the Adams Circuit court. Mr. Heller, in opening the meeting declared "we are assembled here to name the next judge of the Adams Circuit court."

Mr. DeVoss was asked to come forward. He expressed his appreciation of the honor given him and assured all that he would exert every effort for the success of the Democratic ticket next fall.

J. L. Ehler, committeeman from Second ward "A", Decatur, presented a resolution relative to the vacancies on the township tickets in Blue Creek and Washington townships for advisory board and Justice of the Peace. The selection of advisory board members in Blue Creek was left in the hands of the precinct committeemen.

John T. Kelly, former county clerk and former prosecuting attorney of Adams county was selected as the candidate for justice of the peace in Washington township.

Mr. DeVoss has been a resident of Decatur nearly all his life. He was born in Farmland, Randolph county, 53 years ago and came to Decatur when a boy. His father, the late L. C. DeVoss practiced law in this city for a quarter-century.

Served as Mayor

Mr. DeVoss was graduated from the Decatur high school and his first insight and knowledge of the law was obtained through the appointment as reporter of the Adams circuit court when Judge James T. Merryman became judge in 1906. He served in this capacity for about 16 years, resigning when he was elected mayor of Decatur in 1922. He served one term as mayor. He also served one term as city clerk under Mayor Judson Teeple.

Through his associations with the legal profession and study in his father's law office, together with his official position, he obtained a practical experience in law and was admitted to the local bar about 20 years ago. He made an excellent record as mayor and is an authority on municipal and parliamentary procedure.

Mr. DeVoss was a candidate for the Democratic nomination for judge in 1930, when Judge Erwin was nominated.

He is a member of the First Presbyterian church of this city, is married and has three children, namely John DeVoss, a law student at Indiana University, Miss Marjorie and Miss Bernice DeVoss.

Although the Republican candidate for judge has not yet been named, it is assumed that Judge C. L. Walters who was named to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Dore B. Erwin will be the party's candidate.

HEART STRINGS

SYNOPSIS

Young and beautiful Patricia Braithwaite adored her father so much that she was willing to sacrifice love and happiness to insure his future independence by marrying middle-aged Harvey Blaine for his wealth. It was Aunt Pamela who suggested that Pat marry wealth, warning that "the glamour of love wears off." Pamela spoke from experience; her own marriage to handsome Jimmie Warren, a young lawyer, was becoming dull. Jimmie, furious at Pat's engagement, awakens to the realization that he, himself, cares for her. Pat, with youth's optimism, hopes in vain that the young camper whom she only knows as "Jack", and saw only once, will rescue her from Blaine. Jimmie finds her in the garden, sobbing. He takes her in his arms and, in despair and hungry for love, she permits him to kiss her. Next day Pat breaks her engagement. Pamela is suspicious when, immediately following Pat's broken engagement, Jimmie offers to loan Pat money to study art. Pat's father declines Jimmie's offer, saying his insurance was adequate for her needs. He plans to take Pat to Paris. One minute Patricia feels she cannot leave Jimmie, and, the next, she loathes him for the kiss experience of the previous night. Then Jack arrives. Pat thinks—if he had only come yesterday, for, today, he is too late and it is Jimmie she wants. Jack explains he stayed away because her "good-bye" seemed so final. He tells her his name is Jack Laurence.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

She sat up sharply. "Jack Laurence!" No wonder he had seemed so amazingly familiar. Oh, idiot! How could she have forgotten! "When did you get back?" she asked. "I'm surprised I hadn't read about it."

"There's never so much fuss over the solution of a mystery," he grinned. "But anyway, I'm not officially back. My father knows. I asked him not to give it to the papers. I sort of had a feeling that I must have a little while to get myself together before I had reporters descending upon me. You see, Dad's rather prominent, and he made such a staggering stir when I disappeared."

She laughed softly. In a flash had come back all those pictures of three years ago. In papers. On the screen. College pictures, most of them. A famous quarterback in action. All the yards of film resurrected to help in the world-wide search for him. He had started for Mexico to look after some oil lands belonging to his father. And had dropped off the earth. All trace of him had been lost in El Paso.

"But where on earth were you?" "The most obvious place you can imagine. Guess."

"Were you in America all the time?"

"All the time." "Well, if you'd been in a hospital you'd been located—or in a prison—unless a Mexican prison."

"Exactly." "And they couldn't find you in all that time?"

"They didn't. I served almost two years on a rock quarry chained to one of the men who'd taken me."

Taken at first for ransom, his captors had been unable to claim the offered reward. In hiding from their own government they had to be wary of revealing themselves. They planned to get across the border, made several attempts, but always had to get back to cover.

Then in the general upheaval in Mexico they had been thrown into prison and he had gone with them as a matter of course. He had tried to bribe his new captors, but they were too busy with their own affairs to pay any attention to the ravings of a ragged tramp who was

"I was half mad," she said, "or I'd have known that things didn't happen like that in real life."

as brown as a native. Fortunately the rock quarries to which they were taken were close to the sea. Two years later he had escaped with his original captors, helped by their friends.

The low vibrant voice stopped. "Which reminds me," he went on, "that if a young man, or an old one should one day go about inquiring for a young lady named Pat—just Pat—Mostly Pat—he might find himself locked up by a vigilant police eager to protect people from the insane."

"You are irrepressible!" she laughed. "In books people who have had troubles make it a business and a duty to gloom about them all the time."

"And in life they make it a business and a duty to forget them as much of the time as possible. But don't try to turn me aside. I insist—your police identification, s'il vous plait."

She told him her last name, giving as her permanent address the plantation, R.F.D. "But won't you come over tomorrow and meet Dadums?"

"I think I'll move over," he chuckled. "I feel the call of civilization."

He was looking down into her face and she saw again that strange hunger. . . . The sharp sweetness of that moment in his tent flooded her memory. "It must be after one o'clock," she said hastily.

"What difference does that make, really? Don't you know I love you, Pat? I want you to be my wife."

He caught her hands. "I know it seems hasty. But I feel that we have known each other very long, that you have belonged to me, I have belonged to you, always. I wanted to take you in my arms yesterday, terribly. . . . I thought you too wanted . . ."

Something clicked in her heart like the opening of a door and another man came out of the mist that had enshrouded him. Sharply. As if flashed on a screen. A big man with merry blue eyes and fair hair that had little crinkles in it. She sat up like one awakened from sleep, the lethargy that had succeeded her emotional storm wiped out.

The memory of Jimmie's arms, Jimmie's lips, flooded her being. What was she doing
