Rugs
After using the vacuum cleaner on the rugs, wipe them off with warm soap suds to which a little ammonia has been added. Then wipe off with a rag dipped in clear water. Let dry on the floor and the rugs will be freshened.

The Sick Room
The danger of spilling the medicine will be avoided if a deep medicine spoon is used. It is marked like a measuring spoon to show the desired dose.

Omelets
When making an omelet do not use a large pan or the eggs will spread and the omelet will become tough and thin. Use a small deep pan.

and the party drove away.

Tomlinson told authorities he was awakened when the automobile stopped in the driveway. He said he fired when he heard one person say Here's a good tire, he believed he said that they were about to steal a tire he had left on a rack.

Lee's companions told police that they believed the tire had been left behind by other members of their party in another machine, who also had stopped in the station and had driven away a few moments earlier.

300-Year-Old Bible Bought

Omaha.—(U.P.)—A 300-year-old Bible that was loaned to a Christian church of Omaha ten years ago by Lincoln Jackson, of Fairbury, Neb., is being sought by the Chamber of Commerce at the request of Thomas Jackson, of Fort Recovery, Jackson claims his brother Lincoln had brought it west from Fort Recovery. It was brought to this country from England in 1824.

"Heart's Content" on Return Flight Home

until 1963, should be visible to a hundred million persons unless drab, contrary clouds, hide the drama of the skies.

At Conway, N. H., the sun shone in an almost cloudless sky shortly before 8 a. m. EDT. The Conway area is the center of eclipse activity.

However, overcast skies prevailed at 7 a. m. at Derby, Vt., first New England port of entry of the total eclipse. There were indications of clearing. The sun was shining earlier in the morning.

If the clouds do their worst, the work of scientists for a decade or more will be for nothing. Their equipment, costing millions of dollars, and years of labor, was scattered from football fields of Maine to golf courses in Quebec to record nature's great phenomenon.

While the scientists looked on with the costliest equipment, prepared colored goggles, smoke watch crystals or spectacles, fogged film or camera plates through which to

Vagabond Dreams Ended

When Rudy Vallee (inset), world-famous crooner, found the girl of his "vagabond dreams" and married Fay Webb (above) a little over a year ago, the world sighed and prophesied a long and happy voyage for the crooner's marital barque. But now, owing to "geographical" likes and dislikes, the good ship matrimony is on the rocks. Fay says she cannot live outside her native California and Rudy's career and ambitions are bound up with the East. So a divorce is the only solution to the problem.

watch. Others planned to listen in on static, on the tricks played by sun and moon with electricity in the air, on the story of what was happening between the earth and sun described by a radio announcer more accustomed to describing events between chalked lines on a football field.

Dress rehearsals for the sun's great show were completed Tuesday in about 40 different spots where expeditions have gathered to study the eclipse.

Dress rehearsals for the sun's great show were completed Tuesday in about 40 different spots where expeditions have gathered to study the eclipse.

No time could be lost, these scientists knew, for the total eclipse was to be visible, clouds permitting, no more than 102 seconds. Little more than a minute and a half. Of course the partial eclipse was to be visible for two hours or so.

Men with megaphones at their lips, and watches in their hands, tolled off the seconds in these dress rehearsals.

Many scientists were concerned chiefly with pictures of the sun's "crowning glory," the corona; and the flash spectrum. The corona is the brilliant, dazzling halo that breaks through the cases or atmosphere around the rim of the sun at the moment the moon hides the entire surface of the sun. The flash spectrum is the rainbow-like display which flashes just a moment before the total eclipse.

Motion picture cameras were everywhere, occupying all points of vantage, towers, buildings, mountains, airplanes, so that an inquisitive world dazzled by a sight could not understand might see that sight

Dearborn Observatory associated with Northwestern University.

A final drill yesterday put the scientific staffs through the routine of the eclipse picture taking. Precision chronometers ticked off the seconds as a human voice took up the count every ten seconds.

Dr. Lee rigged up a 100-foot tower with thermometers adjusted every 25 feet to register temperatures and barometric readings. The readings were to be correlated with planes flying 700, 3,000, 10,000 and 20,000 feet above the tower. The equipment is part of a scientific study of the Einstein theory of starlight deflection.

On a golf course near Magog, Que., a little Canadian village which bears the name of a giant antiquity, Dutch, British, American and Canadian scientists waited.

Thirty tents were pitched upon the fairways. Under the canvas were a quarter of a million dollars worth of telescopes, cameras and scientific instruments. Among the scientists were Professor S. A. Mitchell, of the University of Virginia, a University of Cambridge expedition, men from the Netherlands and Belgium.

Chief interest of the University of Virginia group was centered upon the corona and its spectrum, distinguished by a faint green line. This line, called a flash spectrum, is visible only during a total eclipse. The astrophysicists are primarily concerned with the flash spectrum because it indicates the height to which vapors flare up from the sun and also gives the clue to the rare chemical composition of the gases. From the faint green line they hoped to solve the mystery of the atom and the secrets of the sun. Not more than half a dozen satisfactory photographs of the flash spectrum have been made since its discovery in 1870.
