DECATUR A. C.'S VS. HUNTINGTON

Huntington Elks Will Play Local Team At Decatur Gym Tonight

A real battle is in prospect for Decatur basketball fans tonight with the Decatur A. C.'s meeting the Huntington Elks at the high school gym at 8:30 p.m. Huntington defeated the A. C.'s at Huntington last week in a hard-fought game, 36 to 31.

The Elks team is composed entirely of former Huntington high school stars, including Kriegbaum, for several years coach of the Huntington Vikings and a former Purdue University player. Most of the Elks team played several seasons under Kriegbaum at Huntington. Outstanding stars on the team are the Hosler brothers, Carroll, Rudolph and Todd.

A good preliminary game has been arranged, with the A. C. second team meeting the Smith Coal Company team of Fort Wayne at 7:30. The Fort Wayne team is composed of former high school players from the various teams of that city.

Announcement was made today that reduced admission prices will prevail tonight. The charge for men will be 20 cents, ladies and high school students 10 cents, and children five cents.

The A. C.'s also are planning to enter the Northeastern Indiana Independent tournament which will be held at Berne on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, January 19, 20 and 21. Between 12 and 16 teams are expected to enter this meet.

A real battle is in prospect at the high school gym tonight when the Decatur A. C. and the Huntington Elks tangle. Huntington has lost only two games this season and has many prominent former high school stars in the lineup, including Kriegbaum, former Viking coach, the Hosler brothers, Rudolph, Todd and Carroll.

A capacity crowd is expected for the annual Decatur-Bluffton game here Friday night. A number of tickets have been sent to the Parlor City and a bunch of Tiger rooters will follow their team here. If there is anything Bluffton would rather do than beat Decatur, it is to beat Decatur twice. (Same goes for Decatur).

BEAT BLUFFTON!

Adams county high school principals met Tuesday night and set the date for the county first team and second team tournaments. Both meets will be held at the Berne auditorium. The second teams will play Saturday and Sunday, January 14 and 15 and the first team tournament will be held January 27 and 28.

While on the subject of tournaments, don't forget that the annual A-B-C blind tournament will be held in the Decatur gym Saturday, January 14. The participating teams, as indicated by the name, are Auburn, Bluffton, Decatur and Kendallville. Auburn won the first meet, held at Auburn in 1931. Bluffton won its tournament last year, so it must be Decatur's turn this year.

The Monmouth Eagles and Pleasant Mills meet for the second time this season at the Decatur Catholic gym Friday night. Pleasant Mills won the first game between the two teams by a five-point margin. Three games will be played Friday night, including the girls teams and the first and second teams, the first game starting at 6:30 o'clock. Saturday night, Pleasant Mills will meet Geneva at the Hartford township gym.

Big Ten basketball teams didn't fare so well in their final pre-conference games last night. Only one of the four teams engaging in battle came through with a victory, Illinois handing the University of Detroit a severe 39-28 lacing. Marquette registered its second victory of the season over Wisconsin, 22 to 16; Miami nosed out Indiana, 33-29, and North Dakota State gave Iowa its first defeat of the season, 21 to 17.

In other college games, Butler swamped Grinnell by a rousing 55-22 score; Centenary of Louisiana defeated Ball State, 24 to 19; Washburn downed Wittenberg in a thriller, 35 to 32, and Michigan State whipped Syracuse, conqueror of Michigan U., 23 to 16.

CROWLEY SIGNS WITH FORDHAM

New York, Jan. 4.—(U.P.)—James H. (Sleepy Jim) Crowley, one of Notre Dame's famous "Four Horsemen," and football coach at Michigan State college for the last three years, has signed a three-year contract as head coach with Fordham university.

This young Hoosier who galloped to fame with Stuhldreher, Layden and Miller, will be the first coach to equip a major New York team with the Rockne system of attack.

He succeeds Major Frank W. Cavanaugh, who resigned on December 19 because of illness after six years with Fordham. Crowley's resignation at the Michigan agricultural school will become effective February 28, and he will take charge of the Rams for spring training. Glenn Carberry, Notre Dame captain in 1922, will be one of his assistants.

In announcing Crowley's contract, John F. Coffey, Fordham's graduate manager of athletics, intimated that the Rams, with their great man-power, had been extremely anxious to get Crowley and the South Bend system.

Coffey declined to discuss salaries, but it is understood Sleepy Jim will receive $11,000, an increase of $3,000 over his Michigan State contract. He was granted his release by President Robert Shaw, who didn't wish to interfere with Crowley's advancement. The contract at Lansing had one year to go.

Card of Thanks

Misses Olive and Emma Miller Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Miller and family wish to express their heartfelt thanks to the neighbors and friends who in any way so kindly assisted in the death and burial of their Father and Grandfather George Miller also for the beautiful flowers to the undertaker and to the minister for his words of sympathy.

Decatur A. C. vs. Huntington Elks, D. H. C. gym, 8:30. Preliminary 7:30. Gents 20c, Ladies and H.S. students 10c, Children 5c. Come out and see a good game. Admission reduced so you can enjoy an evening of good entertainment.

CHAPTER FORTY-ONE

Again there was silence; of frustration for her, of agony for him. And then, woman-like, she came back to the beginning.

"Then it was not comedy you played today? Not quite?" Her voice was coaxing.

"What else? I am I; you are you. The only bridge that Fate can fling between us is a bridge of make-believe."

"Fate, perhaps. But you, yourself. You... you build no bridges?"

"Almost roughly he answered her. "There is none would bear me. I am too heavily laden."

"Can you throw off no part of this load?"

"Can a man throw off his past? His nature? It is from these I derive my load of shame."

She shook her head slowly. She leaned against him, as she answered.

"Your nature is not so laden. I have studied it. As for the past... What is the past?"

"Our heritage in the present."

"May not a man discard his heritage?"

"Not when he inherits from himself. It is a part of him."

She sighed. "How obstinate you are! Are you quite sure that your humility is not a form of pride?"

"Pride?" he echoed in repudiation, and upon the word fell silent, thoughtful, to say at last: "Perhaps it is. An obstinate pride to serve Honour at last, that in serving it I may be worthy at least of the passing thought you have bestowed on me."

"And if it were not passing?" she softly asked him.

"It must be," His voice was firm. He drew away a little, as if so that the warm, sweet contact of her arm upon his own should not efface his stout purpose. "Later—soon—when you are restored to your own people and to the ways of life to which you belong, you will look back on this adventure as upon some incredible nightmare from which you have happily awakened. Take nothing from it with you into that waking future to mar its sweet serenity."

"Charles!" She set a hand upon his, where it rested on his knee.

His hand turned in her grasp to close upon her own and press it. Still holding it he rose, and drew her up with him.

"I shall remember, Priscilla; always shall I remember; and I vow to you here that I shall be the better for remembering."

"If it should be my will to give?" she asked him, scarcely above her breath.

His reply came instantly and firmly.

"This pride of mine will not suffer me to take such gifts. You are you, and I am I. Think well what this means: what you are, and what I am. Good-night, my dear." He raised her hand, and bending his head pressed his lips upon it. Then he released it, and lifted the curtain for her.

"Tomorrow this will be a sweet dream that I have dreamed here under the stars and you on your couch in there from which I should not have summoned you."

For a long moment she remained standing before him, her face a white blur in which the dark pools of her eyes were turned towards him. Then, bowing her head a little, she passed into the hut without another word.

Her demeanour next morning, when again he came to act as deputy for the mysteriously absent Pierre, accorded with his injunction that what had passed between them in the night should be regarded as a dream. If she was pale and of a heaviness about the eyes that "I shall remember, Priscilla; always shall I remember, and I vow I shall be the better for remembering."

argued lack of sleep, her manner at least was normally bright, and it was of the absence of Pierre that she spoke. As usual he evaded her questions on the subject.

After breakfast there was that day no question of the usual sword practice with the Major. Following upon the events of yesterday it was tacitly agreed that the two men should never both be absent at the same time from their encampment.

Monsieur de Bernis wandered off to the northern end of the beach to observe the progress of the work upon the careened hull. The tarring was nearing its conclusion. By tomorrow, the men told him, as he mingled with them, they would start the greasing that marked the end of their toil. They would be thankful, they asserted with many a frown, to have the Black Swan afloat again. He jested with them, as usual, and encouraged them again with a reminder of the golden harvest they would sail away to garner. He was still in talk with them when Leach sauntered up.

There was a deliberate, sly, and wickedly purposeful air about the Captain as he joined them. It coloured the manner in which he greeted them, the men, reminding them that progress with the work was slow enough without their suspending it to stand idly in talk. Did they want him to spend the remainder of his life on Maldita? Then he obscenely invited Monsieur de Bernis to find other employment, and not to stand there wasting the time of the hands.

Curbing himself before the Captain's calculatedly offensive manner, Monsieur de Bernis shrugged, and began to move away without other answer. But this did not satisfy the Captain, who came briskly after him.

"D'ye shrug your shoulders at me, Bernis?" he demanded, loud enough to be heard by the men.

Over his shoulder, without checking in his stride, de Bernis answered him: "What else would you have me do?"

"I'd have ye attend, I'll have ye know I'm captain here, and when I speak I expect an answer."

"I obeyed your wishes. Is not that answer enough?"

He halted now, confronting Leach. They had moved out of earshot of the men. But they were still under their eyes, and those eyes were watchful. The buccaneers had sensed the beginnings of a very pretty quarrel in the Captain's opening words, and it being in their natures to love a fight, they looked on hopefully without even a pretence of attending to their work.

Leach considered the Frenchman with an eye of cordial dislike.

"He shrugged at me," he complained truculently. "I'll have no man shrug at me when I give orders. Least of all a French dandy."

Monsieur de Bernis considered him in his turn. Himself armed, he observed that Leach, too, had hung a rapier at his side. Nor did a certain eagerness in Leach escape him.

"I see," he said. "Ye want to put a quarrel on me. But ye dare not do it openly, lest your followers should call you to account for it. So ye think to provoke me into striking you, with Wogan looking on to yonder. That, you suppose, will justify you in their eyes. Do I read you aright, Tom?"

The other's furious countenance told him that he did.

"Be sure as I reads thee aright, Charley. Thee's just a cowardly cuckoo, impudent so long as these counts thee self sheltered."

But de Bernis laughed aloud. "Maybe you are right," said he shamelessly. Then he sobered. "There's a day for everything, Tom. Ye may be athirst for my blood. But this is not the time to drink it. The draught would poison you. Haven't they warned you of it—Bundry and the others?"

In words at least Leach could vent some of the hatred into which de Bernis had come with him. "Ye pitiful, tale-bearing craven!" he said, and spat deliberately in token of his contempt. Then turned on his heel, and moved away, in the direction whence Wogan was uneasily advancing. But he went ready to swing round at the first sound behind him, confidently expecting de Bernis to throw caution to the winds before that crowning insult.

Monsieur de Bernis, however, disappointed him. He remained looking after that leisurely departing scarlet figure, with narrowing, calculating eyes, and the faintest shadow of a smile under his little dark moustache, until the Captain was joined by Wogan. Then he, too, moved away, returning to his own side of the beach.
