Paris Styles

Paris. —(UP)—Well, well, well—back again on my skates doing the town with an eye and an ear for the latest developments in fashions. I am more firmly convinced than ever that France is the country of ingenuity and inspiration, and that America is the land of the expert copyist and adapter of the mode.

So many things to write about—new frocks popping out from all the smart shops—I scarcely know which to select for a brief description. I've decided, however, on a black velvet afternoon tea frock with a turned down collar and cuffs of old ecru lace. This is owned by Miss Audrey Kilvert of New York. Other versions of it also are the property of the Marquise de la Gandara, the aunt of Prince Pio di Savoia, who is to marry Donna Vittoria Colonna this month; and by young Madame Barachin, who has it in dark green.

An attractive cocktail frock also is of black velvet with a little jerkin of silver Irish crochet lace, and it is worn by the Duchesse de Levis-Mirepoix. These both are Chanel selections.

The Women's Missionary Association of the United Brethren Church will meet in the church parlors, Wednesday afternoon at two o'clock.

The Women's Missionary Society of the Christian Church will meet with Mrs. Fred King Thursday night at seven-thirty o'clock. Mrs. Dorphus Drum will be the leader.

The N. and T. Club will meet Wednesday afternoon at two o'clock with Mrs. R. A. McDuffee on West Madison street.

Mrs. Ray Fryback will entertain the members of the Frivoly Club Wednesday night at seven-thirty o'clock, at the home of Mrs. Will August.

The Adams County Choral Society will meet Tuesday night at seven-thirty o'clock above the Brock Store.

The Tirzah Club of the Ben Hur Lodge will meet Friday night in the Ben Hur hall following the lodge session. A pot-luck luncheon will be served and each member is requested to be present and to bring an article of food.

CHAPTER FORTY-FIVE

There was an outcry simultaneously from the crowd of buccaneers, then utter silence, as Monsieur de Bernis, having withdrawn his sword, placing one foot for the purpose against the body of his fallen opponent, stood erect, grim, breathing a little hard and mopping the sweat from his brow with the sleeve of his fine cambric shirt.

Standing over Tom Leach as he lay coughing out his evil life upon the sands, Monsieur de Bernis ruefully shook his head, and in the silence his voice rang clear.

"Too fine an end for such as you, my Captain."

The last choking of the buccaneer cough was uttered; the twitchings of his body had ceased, and he lay on his back grinning up at the blue sky that was like a dome of polished steel, before there was any movement in the surrounding crowd. After that single outcry, when their captain had gone down, an awed silence had fallen upon those wild men. Accustomed though they were to scenes of violence and to sudden and bloody deaths, there was something in this abrupt passing of their leader to inspire awe in those wild breasts.

Leach had been of such vitality, and had come scatheless through so many fierce encounters that he had seemed almost immortal to the men he led. And here, almost in the twinkling of an eye, behold him stretched stiff and stark. Wonder, too, now that the thing was done, was stirring in their minds as to what must be the consequences to themselves of their Captain's death.

The silence endured until Bundry roughly now broke his way through the ranks which yielded as readily as earlier they had resisted him. Ellis and Halliwell followed through the gap his passage made.

Monsieur de Bernis looked up at their approach. He was not entirely without alarm, although he contrived to conceal it; but in the main he conceived himself sufficiently protected by the circumstances.

Standing where he did, with one shoulder to the sea and the other to the woods, he commanded a wide field of vision. Twenty yards away and above him on the beach, he beheld Miss Priscilla and the Major standing at gaze, and he conceived the fears that must be distressing her, if not on his account, at least on her own, since even now, if this affair should find issue in avenging upon him of the Captain's death, the must suppose that she would be left at the mercy of these ruffians.

For the moment, however, the buccaneers still made no movement. Perhaps they considered that the matter was one beyond their judgment, and they were content to leave it to those four leaders who were now confronting Monsieur de Bernis within the space ringed about. For Wogan was there too, having been there indeed throughout the combat, and it was Wogan whom de Bernis immediately cited as a witness in his own defence when Bundry challenged him.

"How did this happen?" Bundry had asked, his tone harsh, his countenance forbidding, his eyes piercing as gimlets.

"It was forced upon me. I take Wogan here to witness."

Bundry turned to question Wogan with his eyes, and Wogan blinked nervously and answered, as de Bernis counted that he would answer. He might have been less confident had he known of the understanding that had existed between Wogan and the Captain.

But the Captain being dead, Wogan swiftly made up his mind that, since Leach's plot had failed, it only remained to ensure the preservation of one upon whom depended the capture of the Spanish plate fleet.

"Aye, it's the truth. Bad cess to it! Ye all know how the Captain was feeling towards him, and this morning his humour bubbled over, and he put this quarrel upon him. In fact, as some of ye may have seen, he attacked him before he had even got his sword out, and if Charley hadn't been quick and active, it's murder there would have been."

Encouraged by this to greater self-assertion, Monsieur de Bernis supplemented that assurance.

"It would have been unlucky for all of you if things had fallen out otherwise. There would have been no Spanish gold, no broad pieces of eight for you if Leach had killed me as he intended. The dog might have thought of you if he had not thought for his own share of the treasure before yielding to his thirst for my blood. Well, well! He touched the body with his foot. There he lies as he deserves, for his treachery to you and to me!"

And Bundry, grim-faced ever, and seeing no profit in going against de Bernis at present, nodded slowly. "I warned him. But he was ever a headstrong fool. Maybe he's best quieted."

And by the men who had listened and who had been persuaded by what they heard, this seemed to be accounted a sufficient funeral oration, and closed the matter.

Monsieur de Bernis had been reasonably confident that ultimately he must prevail with them, by means of the prospect of that Spanish gold. But he had expected at the outset a violent explosion of passion over the death of their leader, and he had been bracing himself to meet it. It took him by surprise to discover how little any such effort would be required of him. In the circumstances in which it had befallen Tom Leach's death was no calamity to any of those predatory rogues who followed him. What mattered was that the man who was to lead them to fortune had been preserved.

And so, with scarcely a lowering glance to follow him, Monsieur de Bernis was permitted to sheathe his sword and resume his garments.

The buccaneers broke up the circle and fell into babbling groups, busily discussing the event, its details and its consequences. Already even sounds of laughter began to punctuate their arguments, whilst the dead man lay there almost at their feet, staring up at them from glazing eyes. Wogan actually came to help Monsieur de Bernis into his coat.

They were at some little distance from the others, and Wogan, with his back to them, muttered so that only de Bernis could hear him.

"You'll come to the hut presently. We'll be after electing a new captain, and you'll be needed." More softly still he added: "Ye'll not be forgetting how I stood your friend, Charley, just now when ye called upon me, and that but for me ye might be carion this minute. Sure, now didn't your life hang upon my answer?"

"Did it so? I thought it hung upon the Spanish plate fleet. But if ye covet dead men's shoes, ye may have them for me. I'll follow presently."

He turned from the Irishman, and went briskly up the beach to the three who remained there still at gaze.

Miss Priscilla watched his approach with eyes that were almost of awe. He was so calm, so entirely master of himself, so apparently untroubled, as if he came from some normal daily task. Was he made of iron that he could bear himself thus within a few moments of killing a man?

At stouter quarters, when at last he was very pale under his tan, and she was thankful, relieved—though she scarcely knew why—to discover in him at least this sign of feeling.

"I hope that you were not unduly alarmed," she heard him saying, in his pleasant, level voice. "It was my wish that you should be spared that spectacle." Then he was addressing the Major, who stood there goggle-eyed and loose-mouthed with little of his usual colour in his florid face. "Our practices were not in vain, you see. I had a presentiment that I should need them before we left Maldiva."
