MAY RESTRICT RELIEF BILL TO TWO PRODUCTS

cessful, as would wheat." He explained that 60 per cent of the cotton crop is available for export, whereas almost the entire wheat crop is for use domestically.

Smith said he personally favored a plan whereby the government would buy up the cotton surplus this year and sell it back on credit in proportionate amounts to those farmers who agreed to make drastic production cuts. The cotton would be held until fall and then resold, presumably at a profit due to increased market prices resulting from lower production and the lack of a surplus.

Smith said he believed the transaction could be carried out under the regional agricultural credit corporations set up under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, which he said had "almost unlimited credit and discount privileges."

"I went over that with the governor in detail," he said, "and he said the thing for the cotton people to do is to get together and decide if they prefer that plan."

"He said," Smith continued, "it would be agreeable to him for the cotton people to agree on some plan which would adopt cotton to the bill and to include their idea of what would give relief to cotton."

"He was not familiar with the details of the bill as it passed the house, but he did insist that dairy products, peanuts, hogs, etc.—in a word all but cotton and wheat—be eliminated, and that cotton be so modified as to meet what in the opinion of the cotton people was the thing to do."

Smith said the president-elect's first thought had been to try the bill on one product, wheat.

NOTICE TO NON-RESIDENTS

In the Adams Circuit Court, November Term, 1932, Cause No. 14530. STATE OF INDIANA, COUNTY OF ADAMS, SS: David D. Habegger et al, vs. Ezra Habegger et al.

Comes now the plaintiffs by Lenhart, Heller and Schuriger, their attorneys, and file their complaint herein together with affidavit of a competent person that the following named defendants are non-residents of the State of Indiana, to-wit: Peter Habegger, Mary Lehnman, Henry K. Habegger, Ethel Habegger, and Selma Knutson; that said action is for the purpose of partition of real estate in the State of Indiana; that a cause of action exists against all of said defendants and that said defendants are necessary parties to said action.

Notice is therefore hereby given said defendants that unless they be and appear on the 22 day of the February Term 1933 of the Adams Circuit Court of Indiana, being the 2nd day of March 1933, to be begun and holden on the 5th day of February 1933 at the Court House in the city of Decatur, in said county and state, and answer or demur to said petition, the same will be heard and determined in their absence.

In Witness Whereof I hereto set my hand and affix the seal of said court at the office of the Clerk thereof in the City of Decatur, Indiana, this 16th day of January 1933.

Clerk of the Adams Circuit Court, Lenhart, Heller and Schuriger, Attorneys for Plaintiffs. Jan. 16-17-24

PARTY LEADERS ARE AFTER LONG

emphatically states that the country is going to pot and can be saved only by redistribution of wealth and some form of currency inflation or expansion. A group whose numbers have not yet been revealed stands ready to help Long sabotage senate business pending currency relief.

And in the house the inflation tide is swelling toward the flood.

CHAPTER FIFTY-TWO

Bundry turned his clay-colored face to de Bernis, thrusting out a lip and shrugging his disgust.

"I've done what I could, Charley. You've heard."

Monsieur de Bernis was very solemn. "I've heard. I understand. It is finished, then," he too, shrugged. "The fortune of war," himself he lifted over his head the silver-encrusted baldric that carried his sword, and proffered it to Sharples in token of surrender.

The lieutenant took it, inclining his head a little in acknowledgment, and handed it to one of his men who stood by the bow of the stranded longboat.

"And now Tom Leach, if you please," he said, looking round as he spoke, wondering, perhaps, that he had not yet seen that redoubtable pirate, and that he should not have been present at this parley.

"As, yes," said Bundry grimly. "Tom Leach, to be sure." He hesitated a moment, his piercing eyes upon the fair young face of the lieutenant. "Dead or alive was the condition," he said, between question and assertion.

Lieutenant Sharples stared. "What? Is he dead already?"

Bundry nodded, turned, and started off up the beach towards the massed buccaners and what lay behind them, screened by them.

Monsieur de Bernis went after him, caught and held him a moment by the shoulder whilst he murmured something to him. It was something that made that pallid mask momentarily change its set expression. Then, with a grin and a nod, Bundry went on, and de Bernis came slowly back, and at a word from Sharples entered the waiting boat.

Watching ever from the red bulwarks of the Royal Mary, Priscilla saw and understood. A little moan escaped her.

"The cowards! The treacherous cowards!" she cried. "They have surrendered him. Surrendered him to save their vile skins."

The Major, careful to betray no satisfaction, answered colourlessly. "Naturally. Could anything else have been expected of them?" He set an arm about her to steady and comfort her as she faltered there, suddenly overcome, her senses swimming.

Tenderly he supported her as far as the main hatch, and gently lowered her to sit upon the coaming. There, with her elbows on her knees, she took her head in her hands, abandoning herself to silent misery. The Major sat down beside her, and his arm was soothingly placed again about her shoulders.

He could go so far as to stifle jealous resentment of this overwhelming grief. But he had no consoling words to offer her.

An officer, pacing by the rail of the quarter-deck, looked down upon them, as did, too, from the other side, some of the hands lounging on the fore-castle. But Miss Priscilla heeded nobody and nothing. Grief and horror dazed her senses. It was as if some part of her had been violently wrenched away.

She was aroused at last by the gusty passage of the large gaudy figure of the Admiral, who crossed the waist with elephantine tread, a couple of men following him. As in a dream she remembered having just heard someone say that Sharples was returning. She looked up to see Sir Henry reach the bulwarks and then she heard his brazen voice raised in passion.

"Where the devil's Leach, then? Sharples hasn't got him, after all. Damn him for a fool! Below there,

NOW SHOWING—"STICKING TO THEIR GUNS"

The $2,400,000,000 (B) veterans' bonus drive has been reborn. A bipartisan bonus caucus met yesterday. House inflationists found their ranks reinforced by representatives who would issue money with which to pay the former soldiers.

The inflation movement scarcely can expect more than to hear itself talk at this short session. But the long filibuster is inexorably drawing President-elect Roosevelt into a position from which, soon after March 4, he will be forced to choose between the conservative and progressive groups of his party. Long vehemently claims Mr. Roosevelt as a supporter of his creed.

The Kingfish is gleefully scornful of the senate. His colleagues are angry and if they can arrange it, there is in store for the talkative newcomer a thorough—and they hope effective—spanking.

The way to save money now is to buy at Teeple & Peterson's half price sale.

ALDERLY. Bid Benjamin stand by with his gun-crew. He'll be needed in a moment. I'll shoot them all to bits! I'll teach the dogs! Do they think they can get gay with Henry Morgan?"

He leaned far over the bulwarks to speak to someone immediately below.

"What the devil's this, Sharples? Where's Tom Leach?"

"A moment, Sir Henry!" sang the lieutenant's voice from below. The boat scraped and bumped against the sides of the Royal Mary as it brought up at the foot of the ladder. A pause followed, and then the staring, fearful eyes of Priscilla beheld the figure of Monsieur de Bernis gradually rising above the bulwarks, until he stood there, steadying himself by a ratline, at the head of the entrance-ladder. Calm and smiling, as she had ever known him in the face of every peril, did he now appear.

It was incredible that a man should meet his fate so gallantly.

Sir Henry, standing below him and a little aside, looked up to meet the Frenchman's debonaire smile with a scowl, whilst the head and shoulders of de Bernis' servant, Pierre, began to come into view as he climbed close in his master's wake.

"Where the devil is Leach, then?" Sir Henry trumpeted. "What does this mean?"

Steadying himself ever by the ratline, Monsieur de Bernis half-turned to Pierre, and held out his left hand. The half-caste proffered him a bundle in coarse sailcloth, the natural grey of which was smeared and stained with blood.

Monsieur de Bernis took it, balanced it a moment, and then tossed it forward. It fell at Sir Henry's feet, with a soft thud. The Admiral looked down at it, and then up at Monsieur de Bernis, frowning.

"That's all of him you need," said Monsieur de Bernis. "All of him you asked for. The head, on which you set the price of five hundred pounds."

Sir Henry breathed gustily. "By Jupiter!" His face empurpled. He looked down again at the gruesome bundle from which a stain was slowly spreading on the yellow deck. Then he touched it with a foot that was shod in a gaudily retted shoe. He touched it gingerly at first, then kicked it vigorously aside.

"Take that away!" he roared to one of the men who attended him, and upon that gave his attention once more to de Bernis.

"Ye're damned literal, Charles," he snorted.

De Bernis leapt lightly down to the deck. "Which is only another way of saying that I am as good as my word. Or as good as my boast, if you prefer it. It needs a thief to catch a thief, as Major Sands there thinks they knew who made you Governor of Jamaica."

Sir Henry looked across at Major Sands where he had come to his feet in his bewilderment. He stood beside Miss Priscilla, who remained seated staring, scarcely daring to believe what was suddenly being made plain at least in part.

"Oh? Him!" said Sir Henry. "He thinks that, does he? Bah! He shrugged the pompous Major out of his further consideration. "We've other things to think of. There's a deal here that needs to be explained."

"You shall have all the explanation you could wish when you've paid me the five hundred for that head, and the other five hundred you wagged me that I could not get it for you."

Morgan made a wry face. "Aye,

You never doubt yourself, do you, Charles?"

"I've never had occasion to. But I have been doubting you for three mortal days. Three days late you are at the rendez-vous here, and for three days I've been in torment from anxiety, and forced to endure that dead dog's intolerable insults. But I paid him in full when you have in sight this morning. It was necessary, too, so that I might be literal, as you say."

"We are quits on that, anyway," grumbled Morgan. "For ye'd be in mortal anxiety now but for my stratagem to bring you safely out of their hands. Where would ye be if I hadn't demanded that they should give you up?"

"Where I should deserve to be for trusting to a fool. For only a fool would have overlooked anything so obvious."

Morgan blew out his cheeks. "Oddsfish! I've never known the like of your assurance."

"Don't I justify it? Have I done less than I undertook?"

"Oh, I'll confess to that. I take it luck favored you."

"A little. It saved me the trouble of going after Leach as I intended. He just came blundering across my path whilst I was on my way to Guadeloupe. But it would have made no difference if he hadn't, except that I've saved the Government the expense of fitting a ship in which to go looking for him."

"Come below," said Morgan. "I want to hear about it."

In the great cabin of the Royal Mary sat Miss Priscilla with Major Sands, Sir Henry Morgan, and Monsieur de Bernis. It was by the Frenchman's request that those other two had been brought below, so that they might learn at the same time what yet remained to be learnt in explanation of events which they had so closely shared.

They were seated about the table, and with them sat Captain Aldridge, a spare, lantern-jawed, middle-aged man of a sallow complexion, who, under the Admiral, Sir Henry Morgan, commanded the Royal Mary.

Monsieur de Bernis was quietly talking, giving them closer details of the adventure and of the manner in which he had gone about carrying out his undertaking to secure the coveted head of Tom Leach.

Priscilla, so abruptly lifted out of her terrible apprehensions, sat with senses still swimming from the shocks they had sustained that morning, scarcely daring to credit what she heard and what she had seen. Major Sands was wrapped in gloom. His feelings were mixed and fraught with apprehensions. He could not even pretend that he rejoiced in this solution, although he could scarcely yet analyze his true feelings.

Morgan alone was in high glee, despite the fact that he had lost a wager of five hundred pounds. Relieved of the shadow that had been hanging over him, the dread of drastic action against him at Whitehall if Tom Leach were to continue his ravages upon the sea, he was boisterously hilarious. Once or twice he interrupted the narrative with ribald comments delivered in explosions of laughter, and in the sing-song tones that proclaimed his Welsh origin.

He was loudest in his hilarity when de Bernis gave him the facts of the boarding of the Centaur by Leach and the manner in which he had met the pirate.

NOTICE OF ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE

The undersigned Joseph C. Rich, as administrator of the estate of Peter Rich deceased, hereby gives notice that by virtue of an order of the Adams Circuit Court of Adams County, Indiana, he will at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. on the 26th day of January 1933 at the east door of the Court House in Decatur, Indiana, offer for sale at public sale the following described real estate to-wit:

The North half of the Southwest quarter of Section nine (9) Township twenty-six (26) North of Range fourteen (14) East, containing eighty (80) acres more or less in Adams county, state of Indiana.

Said sale will be made subject to the approval of said court for not less than two-thirds of the full appraised value and upon the following terms and conditions: One-third of purchase money cash in hands, the balance in two equal installments payable in one and two years from date of sale, deferred payments to be evidenced by notes of the purchaser bearing six per cent. interest from date, waiving relief, providing for attorneys fees, and secured by mortgage on the real estate sold, or purchaser may pay all cash on day of sale.

Said real estate will be sold free of liens except taxes for the year 1932 payable in 1933, and also subject to a balance of $2008.97 of a mortgage lien held by First Joint Stock Land Bank of Fort Wayne, Indiana, with interest thereon at 5 1/2 per cent. per annum from October 21st 1932, said mortgage being recorded in Mortgage Record, 70 Page 128 in the recorder's office of Adams county, Indiana.
