RAINEY CHOSEN HOUSE SPEAKER

This group, composed of delegates representing each section of the country, will be selected by the congressmen from the various states.

Rainey, recently considered "too radical" for inclusion in high Democratic councils, was elected on the first ballot. He received 166 votes against 112 for his nearest contender, Rep. McDuffie of Alabama.

His victory brought "progressive" Democrats from the north and west into the saddle and riding high.

Chairman Joseph Byrns of the appropriations committee will share power with Rainey as new majority floor leader.

Buchanan Electric Hatchery

Get the Habit — Trade a Home

The caucus also filled two important committee chairmanships. Rep. Doughton, Dem., N. C., ardent foe of the sales tax, will become chairman of the ways and means committee, the group which must deal with taxes, tariffs and war debts. Rep. Buchanan of Texas will assume Byrns' place as the chairman of the powerful appropriations committee.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SEVEN

Wolfe's face had grown keen and hungry intent. He watched this little man and felt a gradual and little respect for him. Josiah Crabbe was what he pretended to be, a bit of granite, hard, clean, and solid. Men hated him—the men who were weaker and less sincere than he was—and he cherished this hatred, knowing it to be the surest homage that he could receive.

They stared at each other for a moment without speaking. Then Josiah Crabbe leaned back in his chair.

"Thirty years ago they tried to break me, to get me out of Navestock."

Wolfe nodded.

"They couldn't do it. I had my piece of rock. It was a small bit then. They are going to break their picks—on you."

He leaned forward with a certain dramatic fierceness, his hands gripping the arms of the chair.

"Do you take me? You are going to stay in Navestock!"

"How is that?"

"Because I have been waiting for you for the last ten years."

"My dear sir."

"I say that I have been waiting for you for the last ten years. That's plain, isn't it? Not an easy matter to find men, I tell you. Good Gosh! Just think of the flabby folk who swell themselves out to look big and solid. All wind! I want a man who has fought, who has roughed it—who can hit. A strong body and a long arm—you've got 'em. I'm a good judge."

"Thank you."

Josiah Crabbe whisked up his zanderkerchief, and waved it as a bug-fighter might brandish a red flag.

"See! Turrell and the whole crew, ready to charge you out of the town. Hang it all—are they going to do just as they please? I've been waiting to fight 'em for ten years. I was in no hurry; I could bide my time. I knew I could force this on some day. The town has been hanging rotten ripe for years. Old Threadgold knows it. You know it. I say that you are going to stay."

Wolfe tilted his chair on its hind legs, his face half-grim, half-amused.

"You may say that, Mr. Crabbe, but the staying is a different matter."

"You are going to attend me."

"If necessary."

"I say that you are going to attend me."

"What about Threadgold?"

"Threadgold be darned! I have not had a pill from him for twenty years. Do you think I would have that bag of chicken food inside my house? He's Turrell's man; he's in with the rest of them. You are my doctor. See?"

"No, I don't."

"Where's your objection?"

"You don't need a doctor."

"Don't II Can't I have a man to look after me if I want him? Confound it, it's my affair! Look here, you will visit me three times a week at a guinea a visit."

"I can't do it."

"I say you shall."

"The money wouldn't be earned."

"Man, you're a fool! Don't you see I want to give you a start here without flicking your accursed pride? If an old man wants to do a thing—can't a young man grant him the favour?"

"Thirty years ago they tried to break me, to get me out of Navestock. They couldn't do it," Crabbe went on.

"In three months we might have quarrelled."

"No."

"Why not?"

"Men who can hit out square and straight may fight, but they don't quarrel."

"Wolfe's eyes gleamed. "That's true."

Presently he said: "A man cannot make war without guns and ammunition."

"What do you mean?"

"Drugs, instruments, bottles."

"Buy them."

"I may not care to sink my piece of rock in a bog."

"Buy them."

"And take the risk?"

"If I put down fifty pounds on this table, you would throw up your chin. You are made that way. How much have you got?"

"Forty pounds."

"Spend thirty."

"Hum."

"Take rooms. Put up a plate. Hire a nag."

"And current expenses?"

"Listen. In a month you will be earning five pounds a week. That's rock. In a year it will be ten pounds a week. I'll put my word to that. In ten years—"

Miss Edith Wilks—the great dame of the party—occupied one of the end seats next to the door. Her skirts had lengthened a week ago, and her hair bundled itself into a black net. Erect and stiff, her gloved hands in her lap, she turned a condescending head for a moment, and gave Wolfe a very superior stare.

"What a vulgar person!"

"Look at his boots!"

"I thought the man had gone."

"Father said that he was staying at some common public-house."

"I think he is rather good-looking."

"Oh, Ethel, how can you!"

"Well, I like tall men. And he looks clever."

"What nonsense! And he's trying to be grand and haughty; just look."

"Well, anyway, he doesn't gawk."

"These friends of Miss Wilks's were young ladies who had grown up in the rarefied atmosphere of genteel homes. Their correctness was the correctness of the back-board and the music-stool. They had family prayers every morning before breakfast, sedate walks, an abundance of piano rattling, edifying books, religious romances, hours of genteel boredom every Sunday."

Someone pointed, and whispered, "Jess!"

A titting simmer of excitement spread through the party. Heads were turned abruptly away from Wolfe. One or two bonnets protruded over the sides of the wagonette.

"She's there."

"That old green frock, too, and no crinoline!"

"Has she got her basket? The plums and greengages ought to be ripe at the farm."

"Ssh—don't you see!"

"He's going there."

"Not!"

"Don't giggle, Katie, it is not nice."
