YANKEE SLUMP IS PUZZLING

New York, May 16.—(U.P.)—Are the world champion New York Yankees in a temporary slump or are they beginning to crack?

That's the big question confronting the baseball world today as the second inter-sectional shift swings American league teams to the east and National circuit clubs to the west for the season's third period of play.

The Yanks may indicate the answer to that question during the next two weeks as they meet

Come over to the
SUNNY SIDE OF LIFE

Do you want to feel always at your best? To meet each day with fresh vitality? You can. For when you're healthy, you're happy.

A delicious cereal provides the "bulk" that is so important in overcoming common constipation.

Tests show Kellogg's ALL-BRAN also supplies vitamin B to further aid regular habits. In addition, ALL-BRAN is twice as rich in iron as an equal weight of beef liver.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is much like that in leafy vegetables. What a relief to enjoy an appetizing cereal instead of taking patent medicines.

Serve as a cereal or use in cooking. Directions on the red and green package. Sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

Giants, Freddie Lindstrom's triple with the bases loaded featured the corsairs' four-run rally in the second inning. A single by Pie Traynor, followed by Virgil Davis' error, paved the way for their winning run in the third frame. Heinie Meine allowed the Phillies 11 hits, the same number yielded by Elliot and Collins.

RACERS UNABLE TO TAKE SPINS

Indianapolis, May 16.—(U.P.)—With only four days remaining before qualification trials for the annual 500-mile Memorial Day race start, threatening weather today continued to hamper most drivers inside the garages.

The coveted pole position, which affords its winner an excellent chance to win early lap prize money, is awarded annually to the car qualifying with fastest time on the first day.

Low Moore won that honor over the 10-mile qualifying route last year with an average of 117.363 miles an hour. This year the qualifications will be over a route—ten turns around a half mile oval.

Despite the fact that Earl Bicknell recently set a new record for two man cars with a lap more than 129 miles, the consensus of opinion of the owners shows that they expect the fastest time to be between 118 miles an hour.

He laid down the paper and said: "I don't know quite what to think about you, myself. Going back there to work, as a married woman, with that man!—I always thought it was funny if Kimberly was jealous of him unless there was some reason for his being jealous."

Mary Faith got to her feet, her blue eyes blazing suddenly like blue flame.

"Don't you dare say a thing like that to me." She spoke evenly and quietly as very quiet people often do when they are angry. "You know that Kim never had any reason to be jealous of Mark Nesbit or any other man that I knew. I wouldn't be working for Mark Nesbit now if Kim hadn't left me without a cent—I'd be here taking care of my baby all day, as I ought to be."

She heard Mrs. Puckett go lumbering into the dark hall to answer it, and then the sound of her full round voice and another voice—Mother Farrell's. The two of them loud and high, each trying to drown out the other:

"—Come to see the dear baby—"

"—Right in here in front of the fire—"

"—Just got back from Florida today! Couldn't stay long. Doctor's patients, you know. Won't let him have even a honeymoon in peace!"

"Where's my baby? Where's Nana's baby?" She came swiftly and heavily into the room, dressed from head to foot in white as if she wanted to let people know that she had been in Florida—as Mrs. Puckett remarked later to Mary Faith. In one of her hands she carried a small basket of oranges which she gave to little Kim.

"Darling baby! Did he miss his Nana?" she wanted to know, holding his small wriggling body close to her own large one. There was a hint of tears in her eyes when she let him go and stood up. Mary Faith knew how easily she could shed them and how little they meant at any time.

"Poor little child!" she said brokenly to Mrs. Puckett who was moving slowly toward the doorway, evidently very reluctant to go. "It's always the child that suffers when a woman leaves her husband."

It was on the tip of Mary Faith's tongue to say that she had not left Kim but that he had left her, when Mrs. Puckett spoke up sharply.

"You ought to know Mrs. Farrell," she said with a quick up-and-down movement of her head. "You left your husband too, didn't you?" And in spite of her size she fairly whisked through the ruby velvet curtains that hung in the doorway.

"I thought you'd have everything packed up ready for me to move, Mary Faith," Kim's mother said when she was gone. "I certainly was surprised when I unlocked the flat a few minutes ago, and found that you'd just taken your belongings and walked out of it!" She set her lips.

"I left everything in pretty good order, I think," Mary Faith defended herself. "I didn't have any money to have your things packed up. Mother Farrell, Kim left me practically penniless—and he told me he wouldn't send me a cent until I filed suit to divorce him. I had to go to work just as soon as I'd moved down here and found a nurse for the baby."

"You're working?" Mrs. Farrell raised her eyebrows. "Where are you working, for pity's sake?"

"I went back to Nesbit's. Jean Bartlett—you remember Jean Bartlett?—well, she got married and that left my old job open. So I took it."

Mother Farrell's big pale mouth snapped open and she shook her head in a series of little jerks.

"I don't understand your doing that, Mary Faith—I can't imagine what Kimberly thinks of it. You know how jealous he has always been of your Mr. Nesbit. . . I don't know quite what to think about you, myself. Going back there to work, as a married woman, with that man!—I always thought it was funny if Kimberly was jealous of him unless there was some reason for his being jealous."

Mary Faith got to her feet, her blue eyes blazing suddenly like blue flame.
