COUNTY AGENT'S COLUMN

If you are among the numerous home owners that have a poor stand of grass in your lawn, now is the time to start work. Fall seedings of grass are more likely to be successful than spring seedings. Purchase blue grass and red top of high quality sufficient to sow 1 or 2 pounds of the seed per 1000 square feet of lawn surface. The mixture should be made up of 2 parts Kentucky blue grass and one part red top. For new lawns the amount of seed necessary will range from 3 to 5 pounds per 1000 square feet of lawn.

Be sure that the wheat you are going to sow is free from weed seeds. Cockle, cheat, wild garlic and mustard are often spread over the farm by using unclean seed. Wild garlic and wild onion can be eradicated by winter or early spring plowing and cultivation. Fields that are infested with these pests should not be plowed this fall or sown to wheat. It is far better to utilize such areas for the growing of spring crops. In order to eradicate wild garlic and wild onion the field should be left undisturbed until in late winter

SYNOPSIS

The old home town—tiny Athens in the midst—is awaiting the return of its most celebrated son, "Big Jeff" Randolph, for two seasons a national football sensation at famous Thorndyke, one of the most historic of eastern universities. Thorndyke influences had lured Randolph east because he had been a high school grid marvel. On vacations, some of which he spent at home, Tommy (as he was known to his Mom and Pop and other admiring Athenians) was "the glass of fashion and the mould of form" and... an airy arbiter of household manners. Dorothy Whitney, daughter of the town's richest citizen, had been Tommy's high school girl friend but a rift had slowly come between them until the dazling Thorndyke hero had become enamoured of Elaine Winthrop, artist and daughter of a Wall Street magnate. ... Tommy is coming home for Christmas; Athens is astir with preparations for a testimonial dinner. ... But his Park Avenue friends keep Tommy for him is called off, and gloom pervades the Randolph family dinner. ... Poor Mom! She tells neighbors that Tommy sent her a handsome beaded bag but it is recognized as one bought by Pete. ... Meanwhile she received a fancy shawl from Tommy but that bag matter... well, Mom is saved some embarrassment when the mailman gives her a handsome scented letter, postmarked New York, right in the butcher's before the neighbors. One of them is pleading with Mom en route home fearing lest her daughter, Myrtle Flannigan, lose her job in Julius's store (the town atelier) for telling of Pete's purchase. Mom, as always, is tolerant. ...

after Pop and Uncle Louie kept a woman busy—and Pop would have laughed, anyhow, and asked if she was getting "cow-kettish," or one of those other things the men liked to say.

But just for a moment, with her eyes closed, the subtle perfume filled her senses and lifted her into another existence where Mom saw the strangest things; things she had seen in store windows and in advertisements and stage pictures, things which were for women who could afford to be feminine but not for women like Mom. She knew, in that moment, she had always wanted them, like she had always wanted a daughter, even though she had never let herself hope of them; and she let herself hope, while her eyes were closed, that some day, even though she wouldn't be young and pretty as they deserved, some day she would have a whole roomful of nice things—maybe when Tommy got out of school and all of them were rich.

Then Mom opened her eyes, laughed a little at herself because they were a little wet; quickly she stole a glance in the mirror and smiled, sort of pleasantly, at herself; for Mom knew, when she felt as she felt just then, that she was prettier, that she was almost young again; she was sorry Pop wasn't there to catch the moment because maybe he'd feel towards her then as she felt toward him just after he had had a haircut and a shave.

He looked young again, like the handsome boy she had married; and they seemed to slip for a stolen moment from the ever lengthening shadows of the prison of age. She read the letter, written hastily but delicately—Mom knew Marianne was refined; she knew it was Marianne because she always read the signature of a letter first when she didn't know who had written it; and Mom cried when she read it, the letter was so beautiful.

"My dear Mrs. Randolph (it said): I so want to thank you for the loan of your handsome son for the holidays. He is so adorable that I know how you must have missed him. He was miserable without you on Christmas Day but I hope we were at least partially successful in keeping him cheerful.

"I hope your gift reached you in time. It was so much fun shopping for it and I'll be unhappy if you did not like it because he left the final choice to me and it was a terrific responsibility.

"I hope, very soon, to have the pleasure of meeting you and Jeff's father, who is, I am certain, a charming and delightful person; but I know I cannot begin to bring to you the pleasure which your son has brought to us."

That was where Mom broke right down. To think that a fine and beautiful girl like that, Mom knew she was almost perfect, should write a letter like that to Mom and Pop just because they were Tommy's parents. It only went to show what people who really matter thought about him and made Mom all the more determined to pay no attention at all to what the knockers and jealous-hearted people in Athens said or did.

When Pop came home she showed the letter to him. He put on his glasses and started to read it; his head turned a little sideways and that eye dropped a little.

Mem waited.

Pop said: "She writes a good hand."

Mom was disappointed. "But wasn't it a beautiful letter?"

Pop said: "She's just feeding us a lot of boloney."

Mom knew then that he was just as tickled as she; but Pop had an idea he wouldn't be manly or something if he showed his feelings. To prove it he said: "Well, let's eat."

There came a letter from Tommy a few days later and it was filled with ravings about Marianne and her beauty and her talent and her soul; and he went into great details about her clothes. Mom couldn't resist the temptation to take this letter to Butcher Brown's; and when appropriately brewed, she read the right parts of it, never mentioning the part at the end where Tommy asked for twenty-five dollars because he had had to buy Marianne a nice present... what the gossips didn't know wouldn't hurt them.

or early spring when they should be plowed and cultivated until time to plant corn or soybeans. This theory of eradication is based on keeping the plants from producing underground bulbs which normally form in February and March. If the tops are turned under during the time of normal reproduction of bulbs, they will not form. It may be necessary to follow the practice for two or more years to eradicate completely all plants.

Pecan Crop Good

BRADY, Tex. (U.P.)—This section verily is nuttier than a fruit cake. The Bend Pecan Pool, largest co-operative pecan marketing agency in Texas, has estimated it will ship approximately 800,000 pounds of its celebrated product this year. Most of the crop will be sold in San Antonio, which in recent years has outstripped St. Louis as a pecan marketing center.
