SYNOPSIS

The colorful career of "Big Jeff" Randolph, now a national football hero, has been traced from his humble home in tiny Athens, a mid-west factory town, through high school gridiron stardom that made him a magnet for scouts from big colleges and through two years of backfield glory as a superstar at Thorndyke, rich and historic eastern university. He's the idol of fandom, the pet of society, the envy of back-home neighbors, and "my boy" to his adoring Mom and Pop. To the former, he's still her little Tommy and to father, well—Tommy's manners and clothes annoy the veteran glassworker who secretly, however, rates his boy on a par with Pop's supreme political favorite, Al Smith. Before Thorndyke had put a high hat sort of halo on him, Tommy's best girl was Dorothy Whitney, daughter of the richest and most important citizen in Athens. But in New York, Tommy has met Elaine Winthrop, society artist and daughter of a Wall Street magnate. Tommy spends most of the summer as assistant at a boys' camp and becomes greater than ever in the early season games of his senior year. . . . Everyone's talkin' of Thorndyke's coming game with "the Yales" . . . Times are getting hard, but Mom doesn't worry much about Tommy, thinking of Elaine and her Wall Street father; she also thinks of Dorothy.

CHAPTER THIRTY-TWO

Sometimes Mom couldn't help wondering about Dorothy and if she wasn't sorry she had been so snippy. She and Tommy weren't exactly mad; they spoke and all that; but he hadn't gone to see her when he was home in the summer. Cousin Emmy said they had run into each other one night at the Sugar Bowl and had talked real nice but were kind of strange like each one was afraid to take the lead. Mom couldn't say anything against Dorothy herself; she was always real nice with Mom and was certainly a pretty girl and always came home with the latest styles from over east; and she had a crowd around her house all the time although they said she was still going steady with the boy from Smithville. Mom saw him with her one night. He was all right enough but was kind of short and stumpy-like. Mom liked big men. Like Pop—and Charlie Whitney. Uncle Louie was kind of thin and scrawny and was getting hump-backed. Pat Flannigan and even Cousin Emmy's man were big, too. Mrs. Johnson's Hen was just so-so—but any of them were better than the banty rooster across the street.

"Well," said Jerry Randall, "it's the Kid's last game."

"How about the Tournament of Roses?" Charlie Whitney asked.

"No roses—I have a feeling that the Bulldog is mad."

"It'll be a football game," Charlie agreed.

It was—although at the beginning it looked like another personally conducted tour of triumph led by the great Jeff Randolph.

Randolph kicked off and went down to tackle Harlow on the Eli 12-yard line. In two plays Harlow made five yards and then kicked to Barton, the Thorndyke quarterback, who was downed on his 40-yard line, in attacking territory, however.

"Now—let's go," Charlie called. Dorothy gazed at him fondly. Her Dad was a boy again at these games; for this much was she thankful to Tommy Randolph.

The attack was slow starting. Yale linemen piled up two plays; then they became too anxious and were off-side twice and Thorndyke first down on its 44. In three plays they were into Pilgrim territory; then Harlow kicked out of bounds on the Thorndyke 12-yard line.

"And so," observed Jerry, "our backs are to the wall."

"You seem to like it," Dorothy observed.

"No—but I can't seem to work up much of a passion against this threat to the fair name of dear old Thorndyke."

Barton tried a running play to get out of the hole but fumbled; Randolph recovered on the nine-yard line. This time he punted high and far to the Yale 48.

"Good boy Tom!" Charlie said quietly. Dorothy wanted to pat his hand. She felt grateful to Tom Randolph for the moment—in a manner he was pinch-hitting for her. Regardless of what he really thought, it was plain to Dorothy that, in his secret heart, that was Charlie Whitney's son out there on the field.

"Come on, Tommy!" she called. But Tommy got no chance. Yale suddenly threw off its fetters and got hot. A 12-yard gain by Verger; a 25-yard pass on first down, fooling Tommy Randolph himself; two yards; seven yards in a twisting dash by Harlow—Verger again for five and a first down on the four-yard line; no gain and a fervent Thorndyke cheer—then the center of the line opened and Harlow bounced far into the end zone for a touchdown.

Appalled by the suddenness of it, Dorothy said nothing. Jerry's pursed lips were hard to fathom. Charlie was somewhat bewildered and a bit downcast. Dorothy had never seen much emotion in her father in the normal course of life. It was a bit odd that it took a football game and one of his employee's children to make her feel pity for her Dad.

Tommy was lined up under the goal posts.

It was, Dorothy realized, the first time she had ever caught him in an attitude of defeat.

Tommy was straining against it; fighting mad; talking to his men. The whistle blew and they swarmed out to block the kick but it went over their up-stretched arms. The score was Yale 7, Thorndyke 0.

"Well," said Dorothy, "have you worked up any passion yet?"

She was half-inclined to pounce upon him; Jerry was entirely too faithful to the college tradition of nonchalance; there were times when even a gentleman must be stirred.

"I feel inkles," he confessed. "After all—"

In a very few minutes Jerry felt more than inkles. Harlow kicked off over the end zone. Thorndyke put the ball in play on the 20-yard line—and on the first play the zinging Yale linemen crashed through the Thorndyke line as through wet blotting paper and nailed Tom for a nine-yard loss. There was nothing to do but punt. Tom placed his men for protection, dropped far back and, though hurried by the uproarious Bulldogs, got off a high kick to the Thorndyke 43-yard line.

There the snaky Verger caught it, seemed trapped by the two Thorndyke ends but eluded them and was off through the filtered field on a ricocheting course that quickly brought him past the nine Thorndyke men who had gone down under the punt; only Barton, the last blocker, and Tom Randolph were in his path—he skimmed by Barton with the speed of a nervous eel. Randolph got him from the side and barely held to his toe as the slippery Eli wriggled. He had returned 32 yards to the 12-yard line. Another touchdown seemed imminent.

The teams lined up—but before the ball could be passed the gun sounded which ended the half.
