A COMPLETE RADIO LOG

Our Washington Bureau has ready for you a bulletin listing, by groups, according to frequency under the latest allocations by the Federal Radio Commission, and similar government departments in Mexico and Canada, all the principal North American radio broadcasting stations.

About twice as many stations can be received on your radio set if you know just where they should come in on the dial. This bulletin tells you exactly how to determine where stations with various frequencies come in on YOUR dial. It has blank spaces for you to write in your dial settings so that once you have located a station you can always find it. The bulletin will serve you as a complete radio log for your own set.

If you wish a copy, fill in the coupon below and mail as directed:

CHAPTER FIFTY-FIVE

After that, things were easier. People seemed to get used to the idea of Tommy being home and not working. Anyhow, there were plenty more in the town not working and in the rest of the country, too, and everybody was talking about the unemployed and the depression. It had begun to skip Mom and make it hard for her to make both ends meet. What Pop brought in just about paid the rent and gas and electric bill and Pete's board took care of the grocery bill. Mom wanted to pay as she went, no matter how little money came in because there would be enough people sticking bills on Butcher Brown's eye and then, when times got good again, quit him and pay cash to somebody else and never pay him. So with so many not working, people couldn't very well talk about Tom; although Mom did hear from Mrs. Flannigan that Mrs. Farrell had said it was a wonder Tommy wouldn't help Pete at one of his filling stations if he couldn't find anything else to do.

So Mom sent back to her: "After all, you couldn't expect a Thorndyke man to fill up gas tanks." The dog that carried a bone would always carry one back; and Mom knew it always made Mrs. Farrell mad to mention Thorndyke because it was so much snootier than State. Not that Mom was so proud of Thorndyke any more because of the trick the millionaires had played on Tommy. Millionaires were funny people.

Then Mrs. Farrell was bragging all about Joe's new invention at the factory. Pop said it wasn't any invention at all, just a new way to put the dope on the ware and color it. Even Pop admitted it might do some good if they had some orders but he doubted with the dang place, he said, they had no salesmen who could sell things.

Tommy got to talking to Pop about the kind of ware it was; and Pop said it was small stuff, nappies and berries and ash trays and cocktail sets and all that.

"Little stuff that could be used around the house?" Tom asked.

"Sure," Pop said. Then they sat down and talked a lot and Mom was glad because it was the first time Tom and Pop had ever really sat down and talked that way over something both of them were interested in at the same time. They sat outside the door on the steps until it got dark and Mom was real surprised at the sense Pop showed about things, although they always said he was a great one for work and was conscientious.

When Pop came in after Tommy had gone out, he said: "Lizzie, that boy has a good head on him." Then he sat there thinking like it was something he had just found out. Mom had known it ever since Tom had been a baby. Then she thought of the wish Ole Liz had put on him; and Mom thought maybe it had been a bad wish after all, the way things were going. Still, she had faith in Tommy. He'd get his chance again and he'd show them.

Then Mom found out that Charlie Whitney wasn't really against Tom at all. Mom met him downtown and they talked about it. Then one day she found Tommy digging and whistling and working hard back Florrie, the village vamp, came out and sat on the back porch . . . and made eyes at Tommy, asking him about this and that.

he was just waiting for something to turn up; and Charlie nodded and said: "I wouldn't worry about the boy, Elizabeth. He's just passing through a stage and when he comes out of it he'll be all right."

"If times would only get better," Mom said. "How's Dorothy?"

"Fine," Charlie said; and the way he smiled at Mom, they both knew that Tom and Dorothy were back together again. "She's coming home for Easter vacation next week. Time flies, Elizabeth."

"It sure does, Charlie." It didn't seem any time since Charlie used to come home for Easter vacations himself.

Mom would have known something was up the way Tom was acting. He showed more life and pep; had more of his old swing as he walked down the street. He had taken to wearing sweaters and staying around home a lot. He did a lot of little things for Mom around the house—but she wouldn't let him help with the dishes. He went down on busy days and helped Pete. Mom had an idea his money had about run out but he never asked for any and she couldn't quite bring herself to offer any. It was a funny thing, Mom thought, when his own mother couldn't help him. But there was a lot in what Charlie Whitney said.

Tommy was going through a stage; and without knowing just why, Mom knew he had to study it all out for himself. Mom didn't claim to be so smart; but on some things like that she had tokens.

But the nicest thing was the garden. Mom had looked at that back yard for a good many years and thought about a little garden but she never had time for it. Then one day she found Tommy digging and whistling and working hard back
