A COMPLETE RADIO LOG

Our Washington Bureau has ready for you a bulletin listing, by groups, according to frequency under the latest allocations by the Federal Radio Commission, and similar government departments in Mexico and Canada, all the principal North American radio broadcasting stations.

About twice as many stations can be received on your radio set if you know just where they should come in on the dial. This bulletin tells you exactly how to determine where stations with various frequencies come in on YOUR dial. It has blank spaces for you to write in your dial settings so that once you have located a station you can always find it. The bulletin will serve you as a complete radio log for your own set.

CHAPTER FIFTY-SEVEN

Then things began to happen so fast—new things—that before Mom knew it everything was over.

The first was the piece in the paper about Tom's job. It looked so natural to see his picture again with his football suit and the hat on, looking out at Mom so brave and kind of fierce-like. Uncle Louie saw it first and came from downtown with the news. He showed it to Tommy and then gave it to Mom. It said that Big Jeff Randolph had been appointed backfield coach at Thornydyke for the next year and his duties would begin in September. It said that Thornydyke was calling him back to help the head coach because the Pilgrim backfield had lacked punch since Tom had left and it was thought he could teach the young fellows how to do things as he had done.

Uncle Louie stayed for supper and when Pop came in from the factory he hurried up to tell him but Pop went right on taking his shoes off; and when he took off his shirt and started to wash, he told Uncle Louie he was four hours late—that the news had been all over the factory all afternoon; and Uncle Louie said the paper had only been out two hours but Pop just looked at him and said:

"And what did I tell you about them not getting along without him?" Then Pop looked at Tom as if to say that he had a tough time with old codgers like Uncle Louie who didn't know anything about football. Then Pop said: "What's it pay?" And Tom said $3,000 a year; and Pop said, "and you don't have to play—just teach 'em?" and Uncle Louie stepped in and said, "sure, can't you read?" but Pop paid no attention to him; he just said, "that's what I call a job."

That was what Mom called a job, too—particularly because he was going to be a coach and didn't have to play anymore; and it was sure funny to see the people around town, the ones who had raved him and looked down on him and all—they were the very ones who came around shaking his hand and asking him about what kind of a team they were going to have; but Tommy didn't bother much with them, Mom noticed; and it did Mom's heart good to see the ones along the street trying to pretend that they had never said anything against him.

But most of all it did Mom's heart good because it proved that Tommy was great, after all; and now that it was all over she was proud of him for the sensible way he had acted when everybody was down on him. Even after the news was broken he didn't seem excited—he seemed to be studying more than ever about things; and when he got Mom alone one night and she thought he was going to talk about it, she could hardly believe her ears. He was going to stand up for Pete, naturally, and he was asking who was going to be Steve's bridesmaid.

Mom really didn't know; Cousin Emmy had done a lot of talking but Steve hadn't really asked her; but on account of Steve meeting Pete so soon after she came to town and spending most of her spare time with him, Mom didn't know whether she really had any close young girl friend.

"That's what I call a swell job," observed Pop to Tom as Uncle Louie looked on admiringly.

"I figured it must be something like that, Mom; suppose you sound her out as carefully as you can—and if you think she'd really like it, Dorothy will be home by that time."

Mom thought it was sure grand for Tommy to take such an interest and she could see Pete appreciated it, too, and was almost as surprised as Mom—to say nothing of Steve; Mom could see she had been worrying a little, not wanting Cousin Emmy because a young bride wanted a young bridesmaid and not an old scrawny chatterbox who would like as not try to act like they did in the movies and act more important than the bride and ball things up generally. Steve was tickled pink and so Tommy said he'd ask Dot and she wrote right back and said she'd be greatly honored; and she said when she'd be home and just to let her know the date.

That was another thing that was bothering everybody—including the gossips along the street. Of course it had leaked out—trust Cousin Emmy for that, Mom thought—and the first time Mom went to the store after that, the three of them were right after her and although Mrs. Farrell didn't say anything Mom could see she had her ears open to catch anything that was said. So Mom said she didn't know the date yet because that depended some on Dorothy.

"Dorothy who?" Mrs. Johnson said. So Mom said Dorothy Whitney and the three of them almost popped the eyes out of their head. "Is it gonna be a double wedding?" Mrs. Flannigan asked quickly; but Mom just smiled and said no, nothing like that but it was natural Dorothy should be the bridesmaid.

"Oh, she's going to stand up with them," Mrs. Johnson said. "I
