SHERIFF'S SALE

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree and execution to me directed from the Clerk's Office of the Adams Circuit Court, in a cause wherein the Adams Circuit Court, a corporation, is plaintiff, and Marie Swoveland, James A. Swoveland, her husband, Elda Troutner, Pearl Troutner, his wife, Henry C. Crawford, unmarried, Nelson LaRman and Ida LaRman, his wife, are defendants, and requiring me to make the sum of Five thousand four hundred seventy-seven dollars and fifty-two cents with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at Public Sale to the highest bidder on Saturday, the 23rd day of December, 1933, between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M. of said day, at the east door of the courthouse of said Adams County, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years of the following described Real Estate, situate in Adams County, Indiana, to-wit:

The west half of the southwest fractional quarter of Section Twenty-seven (27), Township Twenty-seven (27) North, of Range Fifteen (15) East, in the district of land subject to sale at Fort Wayne, Indiana, containing Seventy-seven and 11-100 (77.11) acres. Except the right of way of the Toledo, Delphos and Burlington Railroad Company, through the southwest corner of the above described land.

Also, the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of Section thirty-four (34) and the South fraction of Section Twenty-six (26), all in Township Twenty-seven (27) North, Range Fifteen (15) East, thence west along the north line of said southwest quarter of said Northeast quarter and the North line of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of Section thirty-four (34) to the Northeast line of the right of way of the Toledo, St. Louis and Western Railroad; thence in a southeasterly course along the north line of said right of way to the east line of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of Section thirty-four (34); thence north 113.9 rods to the place of beginning, containing fifty-five and 35-100 (55.35) acres. Containing in all One Hundred seventy-four and Twenty Hundredths (174.20) acres, more or less.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will, at the same time and place, expose at Public Sale the fee simple of said Real Estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisalment laws.

KNAVE'S GIRL

By JOAN CLAYTON

COPYRIGHT 1932, KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

SYNOPSIS

To help support her stepmother and stepisters, young and beautiful Patricia Warren, a skilled card player, plays bridge for fifty cents an hour at parties given by the wealthy Mrs. Sycott. Julian Haverholt, noted bridge expert, offers to make Pat his secretary and partner. His amorous advances cause Pat to decline his business offer much to her stepmother's chagrin. Pat meets Clark Tracy, the polo player and her ideal, at Mrs. Sycott's. She is heartbroken to learn he is engaged to the socially prominent Marthe March. Bill McGee, a racketeer, is interested in Pat but she loathes him. However, afraid to refuse his invitation, she accompanies him to a New Year's Eve dance. He is shot by a rival gangster. Frantic, Pat rushes home only to be put out by her stepmother who says the police are looking for Pat. Unable to find employment, Pat turns to professional bridge. One day, she is stunned when Haverholt happens to be one of her opponents. She becomes unnerved and loses heavily. Haverholt takes her home and renews his bridge business offer.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

"Do you remember the last time you asked me to work for you?" she said presently, reopening the subject. "Do you remember what happened?" At his nod, she swallowed, proceeded, "If I did take a job with you, would you promise never to let anything like that happen again?"

He looked coolly into her flushed face. The sunlight shone on her tumbled red hair, on the creamy whiteness of her skin, increased the deep blue of her troubled eyes. He looked and slowly shook his head.

"I promise nothing," he said. "His eyes were disturbingly close, disturbingly intimate. Patricia tried to be angry. She was not. This man was such a curious admixture of hardness and softness. She could not make him out. She felt confused and uncertain. All her values were tumbling down around her. She should hate Julian Haverholt, should withdraw from him in loathing, but somehow she didn't."

"You don't want me to promise that," he said.

"Yes, I do."

"What a child you are!" he marvelled. "How can you expect to extract promises from life, promises of that sort? Don't you know there isn't a man living who could make that promise and keep it under any and all circumstances? Don't you know that we don't decide to do things or not to do them? Things just happen and we enjoy them or not as the case may be? Don't you realize that life can't be bargained with? It must be lived!"

An old story, Patricia knew, but somehow Julian Haverholt made it singularly convincing.

"A girl has to think about her reputation," Patricia faltered.

"I'm not proposing to lead you down the primrose path, after all," said Haverholt, smiling. "I'm sorry that you always cast me in the role of the villain. I'm not a villain really. I'm just a rather nice person who is offering you a good job."

Put like that, his offer dispelled some of Patricia's doubts. He dispelled the last of them with his next words. He said:

"A little Puritan like you shouldn't be afraid. Are you afraid you can't take care of yourself?"

"Not at all," announced Patricia decidedly. Suddenly she smiled. "I accept your offer and I thank you."

"Then it's a bargain!"

He seized her hand. They shook hands on it, laughing together, pleased with each other, with themselves.

"We should celebrate somehow," Haverholt said tentatively. "I know!" he exclaimed. "Let's drop

"You didn't expect me to join you, did you?" asked Dorothy Luray.

by my place for cocktails. How about it, little new bridge partner?"

"Fine."

They went immediately to his home in Murray Hill. He had a town house, a beautiful square Georgian building, set in a small formal garden, surrounded by a high stone wall. They walked up a flagged path lined on both sides by prim, clipped cedars. Patricia had never in her life been in a private dwelling house. She confessed it.

"City girl," teased Haverholt. "Ever been in a pent-house?"

"No."

"Gosh, I'm going to enjoy showing you things."

"I've never seen a real butler, either," cried Patricia, falling in with his mood. "Have you a butler?"

"I have but Ellis won't be on view today. This is his afternoon off. We'll have the place to ourselves." Haverholt stopped on the path. "Do you mind that? Would you rather go to the Ritz for tea?"

"I'd rather go inside for cocktails," said Patricia.

Haverholt unlocked a great oak door, switched on the lights in a dark, oak paneled foyer. Patricia had no chance to admire or to marvel at her surroundings before the velvet curtains leading to the living room suddenly parted. Haverholt looked a little queer. Patricia herself felt very queer. She and Julian Haverholt were not alone in the place.

Dorothy Luray stood between those curtains.

"You didn't expect me to join you, did you?" asked Dorothy Luray. She was pale and breathing constrainedly. Her hands that still held the velvet curtains, shook slightly. "You didn't expect me, did you?"

"Why, no," replied Haverholt, collecting his scattered forces, "we didn't. But we're glad to have you, Dorothy," he ended politely.

Her smouldering eyes blazed. "That isn't true. You aren't glad. You came here deliberately to get away from me."

"Don't be ridiculous, Dorothy. The thought of you never entered my head. Miss Warren and I dropped by for a cocktail. I confess that your appearance is something of a surprise." Haverholt paused and said to the angry, accusing girl, "Will you join us in the dining room?"

"I will not."

"Then, perhaps you would like me to call a cab for you?" he said with finality.

"I'm going to stay," insisted Dorothy stubbornly.

Until now Patricia had viewed the scene as a spectator, surprised, humiliated, appalled. Now she took a hand.

"In that case," she interposed in tones that were cool and controlled, "I think I'll go."

"I would if I were you," said Dorothy, furiously turning upon her. "I'd go and not come back."

Their eyes met. The two had come to grips at last. The older girl was shattered with hatred and jealousy; the younger was calm. Her gloved hands clasped over her pocketbook, her head tilted only a trifle higher than ordinarily.

"Well, why don't you go?"

"I've reconsidered," announced Patricia. "I believe I shall stay unless—" she glanced at Haverholt—"unless you prefer that I leave."

"I would be grateful if you would stay," Haverholt told her and continued apparently oblivious of the other's presence, "I am in the habit of entertaining guests of my own choice."

"And I'm not your choice, is that it?" demanded Dorothy, white-lipped.

"That's it," admitted Haverholt with a brief laugh. "Surely you're not surprised. In your present state, Dorothy, you could scarcely be termed an amusing companion. And, I don't recall inviting you here."

"Very well."

Suddenly Dorothy rushed blindly into the foyer. The door banged. She was gone. Patricia stared at Haverholt.

"Well, he asked, 'shall we have our cocktails?'" she said faintly. "I suppose so," she said faintly.

SECRECY AND MYSTERY

Secret writing systems have excited from ancient times Greeks and Romans used cryptograms to convey messages. Bible tells about methods of hidden writings. And all history methods of encipherment that would defy decipherment, until today the most elaborate codes and other agencies of government. The story of CRYPTOGRAPHY, this subject that will hold your interest like a detective novel, explains the simpler methods of constructing ciphers and something of the methods used to decipher such secret messages.
